perishable glory. As well might one accuse the commentators on the Bible of a wish to be thought inspired. Shakespeare, like the Bible, is the easiest book to understand in one sense—the most difficult in another. A little patient study of the subject will convince any one that the works of Shakespeare require and deserve, for their complete interpretation, a larger amount of commentary than do those of any other English writer."—J. O. HALLIWELL Shakespeareana · A List of Works Illustrative of the Life and Writings of Shakespeare, etc. 1850-1866, 1867, 8vo, 90, 61.

This citation affords an opportunity for the expression of our thanks, as a student and lover of SHAKESPEARE, to Mr. Halliwell, by whose self-denying labours so large an amount of valuable SHAKESPEARIANA has been given to the world! Well is it for us all that, to quote his own words, (Shakespeariana, 1887, Pref. 6,) he "can afford to work at these favourite studies without the prospect of remuneration" In the volume just cited, the collector will find a list of desirable books, some of which we presume (we write in October, 1889) may yet be procured.

MEDICAL OPINIONS UPON SHAKSPEARE.

"I would briefly refer to the fallacy pervading all the poetic, dramatic, and artistic descriptions of insanity, save and excepting our own illustrious and immortal Shakspeare, whose wonderfully truthful delineations of the different types of disordered mind, embodied in passages of rare and matchless beauty, must ever entitle him to the distinction of holding the foremost rank among the most eminent psychologists that have conferred lustre on the annals of this or any other country. . . . This great magician, and all-but inspired poet"—FORBES WINSLOW, M.D., D.O.L. Obscure Diseases of the Brain and Mind, 2d Amer. ed., Phila., 1866, ch. iv, §8.

"The extent and accuracy of the medical, physiological, and psychological knowledge displayed in the dramas of William Shakspeare, like the knowledge there manifested on all matters upon which the rays of his mighty genius fell, have excited the wonder and astonishment of all men who, since his time, have brought their minds to the investigation of those subjects upon which so much light has been thrown by the researches of modern science. Shakspeare's knowledge extended far beyond the range of ordinary observation, and comprehended subjects such as in our day, and we may suppose in his, were regarded as strictly professional and special. . . . In fact, we believe a very complete physiological and psychological system could be deduced from the writings of Shakspeare,—a system in complete accordance, in almost every essential particular, with that which we now possess as the result of the scientific research and experience of the last two centuries. In the time of Shakspeare these sciences, like all others, were very imperfectly understood by men who devoted their lives to the investigation of them. . . .

The late Dr. Brigham, who has seen and treated more than four thousand cases of insanity, declared that he had more than once seen the counterpart of Hamlet, as well as of all Shakspeare's insane characters, and he describes with his usual clearness and brevity the peculiar characteristics of each."—O. KELLOGG, M.D. Aristocrat Physician State Lunatic Asylum, Utica, N. York, Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility, and Suicide, N. York, 1866, 1, 3, 37, n.

See, also, Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, by Isaac Ray, in Amer. Jour. of Insanity, vol. iii, and (Shakspeariana, No. 705) A Study of Hamlet, by Dr. Conolly.

"It is remarkable that two of the most perfect pictures of insanity presented to us in the plays of Shakspeare are instances of feigned madness,—namely, the madness of Hamlet, assumed to escape the machinations of his uncle, and that of Edgar, in Leart, assumed to escape the persecutions of his brother. These inimitable representations of the phenomena of insanity are so perfect that in their perusal we are irresistibly led to forget that they are feigned. In both instances, however, the deception was practised by educated gentlemen, and on the authority of the great dramatic psychologist it may, perhaps, be accepted that the phenomena of insanity may be feigned by a skilful actor like Hamlet as perfectly that no flaw can be detected in the representation."—DR. J. C. BUCKNILL, on the Diagnosis of Insanity. Bucknill and Tuke's Man of Insanity, ed. 1858, 8vo.

"An eminent authority makes the following observation upon the poet's description of Gloucester's death, [King Henry VI., Part 2, Act III., Sc II.]

"My readers will smile, perhaps, to see me quoting Shakspeare among physicians and theologians; but not one of all their tribe, populous though it be, could describe so exquisitely the marks of apoplexy, conspiring with the struggles for life, and the agonies of suffocation, to deform the countenance of the dead, so curiously does our poet present to our conceptions all the signs from which it might be inferred that the good Duke Humfrey had died a violent death."—Hell's Principles of Surgery, 1815, n 557.—Shakspere's Shakspeare, ed 1860, n 364.

"Perhaps even now the highest and best delineations of insanity have been drawn, not by Pritchard and others who have particularly studied and observed it, but by one who may almost never have seen an insane person, and who had not himself studied the subject, but by a man endowed, undoubtedly, with the highest genius that the world has known,—as drawn in the character of Lear, Hamlet, Jaques, and in the tender sympathy, the knowledge of the disease, and of the proper mode of treatment of the disease, expressed in the characters of Ophelia and Cordelia."—REV ALBERT BARNES Lects. on the Evils of Chris., N. York, 1868, 12mo, Lect. VII.

SHAKSPEARIANA, 1494-1869.

A complete SHAKSPEARIANA—a catalogue raisonné of all the editions, in all languages, of Shakspeare's works, and the commentaries on and illustrations thereof, the whole accompanied by bibliographical, biographical, and critical annotations—would be a noble offering to the memory of the poet, and should be laid upon the altar at Stratford, April 23, 1864,—the day of the tri-centenary celebration of the birth of "the most august of human intellects."

The above was written and our article on Shakspeare prepared for the press in 1861. In 1863 appeared in Mr. H. G. Bohn's edition of Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, Part 8, 2253-2366, such a Bibliography of Shakspeare as we had indicated in our preceding remarks.

This has enabled us, by the courteous permission of its author, to greatly improve our original sketch; and we have been at no little pains to extend our lists of EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS, AND SHAKSPEARIANA, to the year in which we write, (1869.)

A big dull book has been written upon it, by one who could neither put down with exactness what he saw, nor impart any life to his meagre descriptions. From the first section of his book to the last . . . the Picturesque Views of Mr Samuel Ireland appear to us the production of the most spiritless of delineators. We would not recommend the tourist to encumber himself with this heavy book."—CHARLES KNIGHT Pictorial Shakspeare, 2d ed., 1867, viii 255. (William Shakspeare: a Biography)

The North American Review, April, 1854, 390-423, (Francis Bowen,) and The London Athenæum, (vide 1853 et seq., Indexes,) were among the chief champions of the Corrector and Amender of the mysterious Perkins Folio. The former expressed the belief that "the sure instinct of public taste" would "finally incorporate into the received text far the larger portion of the emendations made by a poor player in the first half of the seventeenth century," (p. 423;) and the latter, whilst admitting that the Folio Corrector was "occasionally puerile, often mistaken," had "no hesitation, after some years' study," in pronouncing him "the most precious acquisition ever made to our means of receiving a genuine Shakespeare text," (1858, i. 559.) On the other hand, Halliwell, Singer, Dyce, Knight, R. G. White, Brae, Hamilton, Hardy, Sir F. Madden, and Ingleby are more or less skeptical both as regards the antiquity and the value of the annotations. Mr. White, whose edition of the poet The Athenæum, 1858, ii. 612, considers to have been benefited by the annotations of The Corrector, remarks, (Athen., 1860, i. 855,) "It seems to me more than probable that most of the many marginal acquisitions in this folio, not peculiar to it, are as spurious in their form as most of the few peculiar to it are, in my judgment, worthless in their essence." Much industry, some logic, and, we regret to add, a vast deal of ill temper, were expended on this discussion. The fruits of the first and perusal of the second were not without advantage to printers and readers; the third profited nobody, and was altogether out of place, for (we again quote Mr. White, ubi supra) "why men should lose their tempers about such purely impersonal questions as whether a certain line should read thus or so, or certain pen and pencil marks were made in the nineteenth century or the seventeenth, I cannot understand."

Henceforth there will be a proper depository for SHAKSPEARIANA. On the 23d of April, 1868, "The SHAKSPEARE Library," founded at Birmingham, in 1864, as a tercentenary memorial, was formally opened for public use. A library devoted to the works produced and elicited by one man,—this is a monument indeed! But there has been but one such man! Let it be accepted as a truth past all debate, that among the great ones of the earth Shakspeare stands alone,—in unapproachable majesty. What was the secret of his power, from whence derived this marvellous insight into human nature under all circumstances, ages, and climes, this accurate knowledge of sciences, arts, governments, morals, manners, philosophies, and codes, this exquisite command of language,—never wielded with such skill before or since,—by which each character, event, or thought is drawn in lines of living light;—this, the greatest of all human mysteries, which we have received from our fathers, we must transmit, deepened and heightened rather than lessened by our labours, to our children.

Our "SHAKSPEARIANA" alone numbers about one thousand and forty printed volumes and tracts how many editions of "SHAKSPEARE'S Works," separate and collective, in various languages, we have recorded, we have not taken the trouble to compute. In typographical bulk this article on the great poet, philosopher, and sage would make a duodecimo volume of about 238 pages, type the same size as that in the narrative portion of the New York edition of The Life and Letters of Washington Irving, or the London edition of the Memoirs, &c of Thomas Moore. The alphabetical INDEX exhibits a brilliant succession of great names,—the names of men who have distinguished themselves in almost every department of knowledge, and who, however diverse their pursuits and tastes, unite in paying willing tribute to the illustrious intellect which has transcended them all.

Shebbeare, John, M.D., 1709-78, a native of Bideford, Devonshire, lived for many years in London as a political Tory writer, and pub. thirty-four books and pamphlets, of which at least thirty are now forgotten. We notice: 1. New Analysis of the Bristol Waters, Lon., 1740, 4to. 2. The Marriage Act; a Political Novel, 1754. The strictures on Parliament in this book caused him to be imprisoned. 3. Letters on the English Nation, by Battista Angeloni, a Jesuit, who resided many Years in London, trans. from the Original Italian by the Author of The Marriage Act, 1755, 2 vols. 8vo. 1756, 2 vols. 8vo. The only "Jesuit" in the case was Shebbeare himself.

"He deserves to be remembered as a respectable name in literature, were it only for his admirable 'Letters on the English Nation,' under the name of 'Battista Angeloni, a Jesuit'."—Boswell's Life of Johnson, year 1781.

4. Practice of Physic, 1755, 2 vols. 8vo. 5. Lydia; or, Filial Piety, a Novel, 1755, 4 vols. 12mo, 1769, 2 vols. 12mo, 1786, 4 vols. 8vo. 6. Letters to the People of England, Nos. 1-7, 1756-57, 8vo. Some copies of the 7th Letter were seized, and for the attacks on Government in the preceding Letters, Shebbeare was fined, pilloried, and imprisoned. The pillory is thus cruelly alluded to:

"Witness, ye Hills, ye Johnsons, Scots, Shebbeares, Hark to my call, for some of you have ears."

Heroic Epistle see Croker's Boswell, Index.

But his ears were uninjured indeed, Beardmore, the under-sheriff, Shebbeare's old coadjutor in the Monitor, was fined and imprisoned for his lenity to the doctor. Boswell (if his allusion was to Shebbeare) thought he "was not dishonoured by it."

"JOHNSON.—Ay, but he was, sir. He could not mouth and strut about as he used to do, after having been there. People are not willing to ask a man to try their tables who has stood in the pillory."—Boswell's Johnson, year 1778.

7. Hist. of the Excellence and Decline of the Constitution, &c. of the Sumatrans, 1760, 2 vols. in 1, 8vo. Some copies are a. a., and one copy, at least, is dated 1763. The "Sumatrans" are the English, and their Constitution is satirically treated. 8. Answer to the Queries contained in a Letter to Dr. Shebbeare, &c., 1775, 8vo. This Answer "contains the essence of all the libels published against William III. and the Whig and Presbyterian parties."

"It would be endless to point out the instances in which the author hath justly laid himself open to severe censure."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1775, 34.

9. An Answer to the Printed Speech of Edmund Burke, Esq., April 19, 1774, 1774, 8vo.

"Slandorous invectives, coarse witticisms, vulgar obscene allusions, and scandalous epithets."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1775, 551.

10. An Essay, &c. on National Society, in which the Principles of Government, &c. contained in Dr. Price's Observations, &c. are Fairly Examined and Refuted, 1776, 8vo. See PRICE, RICHARD, D.D., No. 8.

"His reasoning is often founded on misrepresentations and untruths; his language is frequently intemperate, foul, and opprobrious; his humour is often coarse, low, and indelicate."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1776, 241.

The Doctor's reputation has not improved with time. Lord Macaulay calls him (Essay on the Earl of Chatham) "a wretched scribbler," (see, also, Irving's Goldsmith, 189; Whipple's Lectures, 35,) and is indignant that he should have been "honoured with a mark of royal approbation similar to that which was bestowed on the author of the English Dictionary, of the Vanity of Human Wishes."

This error of judgment was more easily pardoned by the wits of that day, as it enabled them to complain that "the King had pensioned a She-bear and a He-bear." Smollett introduced him under the name of Ferret in the novel of Sir Launcelot Greaves; Hogarth made him one of the group in his third Election print; and the periodicals found him profitable as a stock subject of ridicule and reproach. But "none of these things moved him," so long as he could find reviews to write at six guineas per sheet (Boswell's Johnson, year 1783) and enemies to abuse at three shillings per pamphlet. A biographical notice of him appeared in the European Magazine for 1788, which was republished separately, and partially transferred to Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xvii. 430-434. See, also, Encyc. Brit. and Cunningham's Biog. Hist. of Eng., v. 389-94.

Shee, Sir George. On the Construction of Ships; Trans. Irish Acad., 1794, vol. vi.

Shee, Sir Martin Archer, Knt., D C L., a descendant of the Princes O'Shee of Kerry and Tipperary, was b. at Dublin, Dec. 23, 1770, emigrated to London, was there introduced by Edmund Burke to Reynolds, and became a contributor to the Exhibition in 1789, elected an Associate to the Royal Academy, 1793, an Academician, 1800, and President and knighted, 1830; d. at Brighton, August 19, 1850. As a portrait-painter he cannot be called more than second-rate, as a poet—Lord Byron to the contrary notwithstanding—he will hardly rank so high. 1. Rhymes on Art, or, The Remonstrance of a Painter, in Two Parts, with Notes and a Preface, including Strictures, &c., Lon., 1805, 8vo; 2d ed., 1805, 3d ed., 1806, 12mo.

"Upon the whole, we think very well both of Mr Shee's cause and of his talents"—J. THOMPSON Edin. Rev., April, 1806, 213-22.

2. Elements of Art; a Poem, in Six Cantos, with Notes and a Preface, including Strictures, &c., 1809, 8vo.

"Upon the whole, the notes form the most valuable part of the work"—Lon. Quar. Rev., May, 1810, 407-17.

Lord Byron refers to Shee's Rhymes and Elements in warmer terms:

Thereupon Shee published it,—to his no small profit.

"Shee told us he had got five hundred guineas for the copyright of his rejected play Abbot, in coming away with me in a hackney-coach, remarked how lucky Shee was."—Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, iv. 1853, 161.

1. An Essay upon Poetry, Lon., 1682, 4to. In English and Latin, by John Norris, 1691. In French, by M. Trocheran, Paris, 1749, 12mo.

"His Essay on Poetry is the great work for which he was praised by Rowcommon, Dryden, and Pope, and doubtless by many more whose eulogies have perished. The precepts are judicious, sometimes new, and often happily expressed, but there are, after all the emendations, many weak lines, and some strange appearances of negligence. His verses are often insipid, but his memoirs are lively and agreeable: he had the perspicuity and elegance of an historian, but not the fire and fancy of a poet"—Dr. Johnson's Lives of the Poets, Cunningham's ed., 1854, ii. 197, 198, (q v.)

"I can recollect no performance of Buckingham that stamps him a true genius, his reputation was owing to his rank"—JOSEPH WARTON, Essay on Pope.

The highest compliment paid to his Essay on Satire was the beating procured by Rochester for Dryden on suspicion of his being the author of it, and a portion of it has been confidently ascribed to him, but this presumption some eminent modern critics will by no means admit.

"I cannot think that any part of the 'Essay on Satire' received additions from Dryden's pen. Probably he might contribute a few hints for revision, but the author of 'Abalom and Achitophel' could never completely disguise the powers which were shortly to produce that brilliant satire. Dryden's verses must have shone among Mulgrave's as gold beside copper. The whole Essay is a mere stagnant level, no one part of it so far rising above the rest as to bespeak the work of a superior hand. The thoughts, even when conceived with some spirit, are clumsily and unhappily brought out,—a fault never to be traced in the beautiful language of Dryden, whose powers of expression were at least equal to his force of conception"—*SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Dryden's Miscell. Sheil, Lady, wife of Sir Justin Sheil, K.C.B., late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Great Britain to Persia, and younger brother of the Rt. Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, M.P., (infra) Glimpses of Life and Manners in Persia; with Notes on Russia, Koords, Toorkomans, Nestorians, Khiva, and Persia, Lon., 1856, p. 8vo.

Sheil, Rt. Hon. Richard Lalor, M.P., b. in Dublin, 1793, was educated at the Jesuit College of Stonyhurst, Lancashire, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated with distinction; called to the Irish Bar, 1814, became an active member of the Catholic Association, 1822, returned to Parliament for Anglesey's borough of Milborne Port, 1829, and again in 1830, for Louth in 1832, and for Tipperary in 1832, 1835, and 1837-41, a Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, 1838, Vice-President of the Board of Trade, and a Privy Counsellor, 1839, Judge-Advocate General, June-Sept. 1841; M.P. for Dungarvan, 1841-50, Master of the Mint, 1846 to November, 1850, and from that time until his death, at Florence, May 23, 1851, British Minister at the Court of Tuscany. In early life Mr. Sheil acquired considerable reputation as the author of the tragedies Adelaide, The Apostate, Bellamira, Evadne, and The Huguenot. Of Adelaide (Dubl., 1814, 8vo, 2d ed., Lon., 1816) a review will be found in Lon. Month. Rev., lxxiv, 236; of The Apostate (1817, 8vo) notices occur in Lon. Month. Rev., lxxiv, 239, and Lon. Quar. Rev., xvii, 248. Evadne, the most successful, (largely indebted to Shirley's Traitor), appeared in 1820. Neither of the critiques just referred to is complimentary. That the acting of Miss O'Neil, with an eye to which Sheil especially exerted his genius, contributed greatly to the fame of the dramatist, is not to be questioned.

"There is much vigour of language, force of character, and originality of incident about his dramas. He is earnest, fervent, and impassioned, he is also unequal, and sometimes improbable. All the grand elements of the drama seem in him, he has made a poor exchange, so far as fame is concerned, in preferring, like Sheridan, to move the House of Commons rather than agitate the audience in Old Drury"—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist., &c., 1833.

As an orator, Sheil's reputation has certainly not gained; and it is the judgment of one of the most intelligent of modern critics (see Dr. R. S. Mackenzie's edition of Notes Ambrosianus, iii, 208, n.) that he was never equal to O'Connell. His Speeches, with a Memoir by T. MacNevin, were pub. Lon., 1845, 8vo; again, 1846, '47, '54, '56, and '60. Since his death have appeared: 2. Sheil's Sketches of the Irish Bar, [originally contributed to New Monthly Magazine.] Edited, with Notes, by R. Shelton Mackenzie, N. Shelley, Mary Wollstonecraft, the daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, (vide pp 682, 683, supra), born 1798, became, after a very intimate acquaintance with the poet, the second wife of Percy Bysshe Shelley, (infra) resided with him in Italy until his death in July, 1822, and died in London, Feb. 1, 1851.

Shelley, Percy Bysshe, b at Field Place, near Horsham, Sussex, August 4, 1792, drowned by the capsizing of his boat in the Mediterranean, between Leghorn and the Bay of Spezia, July, 1822, was the eldest son of Sir Timothy Shelley, and a descendant of one of the followers of William of Normandy whose name is recorded on the roll of Battle Abbey. The head of this ancient family is Sir John Villiers Shelley, born in 1808, now (1869) in his 61st or 62d year. The head of the branch to which our author belonged is Sir Percy Florence Shelley, Baronet, son of the poet and his second wife, (supra) who was born at Florence in 1819, and succeeded his grandfather in the title and estates in 1844. The poet's paternal great-grandfather, Timothy, emigrated to Newark, New Jersey, where he married an American wife, and where Shelley's grandfather, Bysshe, was born. After preparatory tuition at Sion House, near Brantford, the subject of our notice in 1805 removed to Eton, there dreamed and studied for three years, and in 1810 was entered at University College, Oxford. But he had now been for some years an author: whilst at home in 1808 he completed two romances commenced at Eton,—Zastrozzi, and St. Irvyne, or The Rosicrucian. They were published anonymously, and condemned. About this time, also, he assisted Captain Medwin in the composition of a poem which was condemned without being published,—Ahasuerus, or The Wandering Jew,—declined by Campbell (New Monthly Magazine) on the ground that it had only two good lines in it. Four cantos, however, many years later gained admittance into Fraser's Magazine, (vol. in 529, 666, 1831) see, also, MEDWIN, THOMAS, R.A., No 3.

He had not been long at Oxford before he published an anonymous volume of poems, entitled Posthumous Poems of my Aunt Margaret Nicholson. This, like the preceding publications, was soon forgotten, (indeed, they can hardly be said to have been ever known,) but about a year later he unfortunately printed at London a pamphlet destined to an unhappy prominence and a baleful influence on his future life,—A Defence of Atheism. This, it is alleged, was simply intended as a challenge to debate, and copies were forwarded to the heads of the colleges with a view to their preparation for dialectical exercise. The invitation, however, was declined; and the youthful polemic, neither denying nor admitting the authorship of the obnoxious thesis, was in March, 1811, expelled from the University. Instead of profiting by this admonition, he employed his leisure hours in London—for his father would not at first permit him to return home—in completing what he should never have begun,—the impious rhapsody of Queen Mab. In August, 1811, he was received into the paternal mansion; and, though certainly possessing little in common with his father in the way of tastes and cultivation, here he might have resided at his ease, absorbed in his books, the contemplation of nature, and the exercise of his rare powers of imagination and expression; but the same month which witnessed his return saw him, after less than half a dozen interviews, the husband, through the rites of Gretna Green, of Miss Harriet Westbrook, the daughter of a retired hotel-keeper. Such matches are not always unhappy,—paternal tradition to the contrary notwithstanding. This was very unhappy; and in June, 1814, the bride, who had about three months before been formally remarried, in England, to Shelley, returned to her father. The same year Shelley started for the Continent in company with Mary Wollstonecraft, the daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, to whom he was subsequently married. (See SHELLEY, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, supra.) In 1815 Shelley's father, in virtue of a business arrangement, agreed to allow his son £900 per annum,—a sum much more than sufficient for his own wants: but the poet was one of the most generous of mortals, and a man of his character seldom lacks opportunities for beneficence. It was in this year that he wrote his beautiful poem of Alastor, or, The Spirit of Solitude. In November, 1816, Mrs. Shelley committed suicide by drowning, leaving two children (a daughter, b. 1813, and a son, b. 1814 or 1815, d. 1826) by the poet; and these Mr. Westbrook, the grandfather, refused to part with, upon the ground that the father was not a person likely either by precept or example to instil virtuous principles into youthful minds. The case was brought into Chancery, and in March, 1817, Lord Chancellor Eldon decided that the grandfather should retain the children. Instead of opening any argument, in this place, on the justice or injustice of this decision, we think it sufficient, and much fairer, to refer the reader to Lord Eldon's Decision as recorded in Jacob's Reports, 267, Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 193, 200, 210, and the biographical accounts of Shelley to be cited hereafter. Our author now left for the Continent, and in Switzerland formed that intimacy with Lord Byron to which we have alluded in our notice of his lordship in this Dictionary, (vide p. 321.)

In 1817 Shelley returned to England, and for nearly a year resided at Marlow, Buckinghamshire, where, at the sacrifice of time, money, domestic comfort, literary ease, and suffering under an attack of ophthalmia, he acted the part of a good Samaritan among the poor people of his neighbourhood. His leisure hours were devoted to the composition of The Revolt of Islam, and a part of Rosalind and Helen,—finished at Lucca in 1818. It was in March, 1818, that he gazed for the last time upon the shores of his native land. Three acts of Prometheus Unbound were composed whilst wandering in Italy, ("upon the mountainous ruins of the Baths of Caracalla," &c.) the fourth act was added at Florence in the latter part of 1819; and it was whilst at Rome, a few months earlier, that he made his translation of Plato's Symposium. In the same year he wrote The Cenci, The Masque of Anarchy, and The Witch of Atlas, in 1820, The Sensitive Plant, Julian and Maddalo, (Shelley and Byron,) and some smaller pieces, in 1821, Epipsychidion, Adonais, (vide KEATS, JOHN, p. 1010, supra), and Hellas, a contribution to the cause of Grecian independence.

The last eighteen months of his life were passed in daily intercourse with Lord Byron; and his lordship's poetry seems to have profited by this companionship. In June, 1822, he was residing at Lerici, a town on the coast of the Bay of Spezia. On the 30th of that month, in company with his friend Captain Williams and one seaman, he set sail, in an open boat, to welcome Leigh Hunt, who had arrived at Leghorn.

"On Monday, the 8th of July," writes Mr. Trelawny, "they got under way to return home, having on board a quantity of household articles, four hundred dollars, a small canoe, and some books and manuscripts. At half-past twelve they made all sail out of the harbour, with a light and favourable breeze, steering direct for Spezia. I had likewise weighed anchor to accompany them a few miles out in Lord Byron's schooner, the Bolivia, but there was some demur about papers from the guard-boat, and they, fearful of losing the breeze, sailed without me. I re-anchored, and watched my friends till their boat became a speck on the horizon, which was growing thick and dark with heavy clouds moving rapidly and gathering in the southwest quarter. I then retired to the cabin, where I had not been half an hour before a man on deck told me a heavy squall had come on. . . . Becoming greatly alarmed for the safety of the voyagers, a note was despatched to Mr. Shelley's house at Lerici, the reply to which stated that nothing had been heard of him and his friend, which augmented our fears to such a degree that couriers were despatched on the whole line of coast from Leghorn to Nice, to ascertain if they had put in anywhere, or if there had been any wreck, or indications of losses by sea. I immediately started for Via Reggio, having lost sight of the boat in that direction. My worst fears were almost confirmed, on my arrival there, by news that a small canoe, two empty water-barrels, and a bottle had been found on the shore, which things I recognized as belonging to the boat. I had still, however, warm hopes that these articles had been thrown overboard to clear them from useless lumber in the storm, and it seemed a general opinion that they had missed Leghorn and put into Elba or Corsica, as nothing more was heard for eight days. This state of suspense becoming intolerable, I returned from Spezia to Via Reggio, where my worst fears were confirmed by the information that two bodies had been washed on shore, one on that night very near the town, which, by the dress and stature, I knew to be Mr. Shelley's. Mr. Keats's last volume of 'Lamia,' 'Isabella,' &c. being open in the jacket-pocket confirmed it beyond a doubt. The body of Mr. Williams was subsequently found near a tower on the Tuscan shore, about four miles from his companion. Both the bodies were greatly decomposed by the sea, but identified beyond a doubt. The seaman, Charles Vivian, was not found for nearly three weeks afterwards. His body was interred on the spot on which a wave had washed it, in the vicinity of Massa."

The bodies of Williams and Shelley (save Shelley's heart, which remained unconsumed by the fire) were burnt, according to the regulations of the Quarantine laws of Tuscany: the ashes of Williams were sent to England; those of the poet were deposited in the Protestant burial-ground at Rome, so beautifully described in Adonais as the last resting-place of the mourner's friend, Keats. Lord Byron superintended the sad ceremony, and a few months later (in April, 1823) he thus referred to Shelley and his death:

"You should have known Shelley," said Byron, "to feel how much I must regret him. He was the most gentle, most amiable, and least worldly-minded person I ever met; full of delicacy, disinterested beyond all other men, and possessing a degree of genius, joined to a simplicity as rare as it is admirable. He had formed to himself a beau-ideal of all that is fine, high-minded, and noble, and he acted up to this ideal even to the very letter. He had a most brilliant imagination but a total want of worldly wisdom. I have seen nothing like him, and never shall again, I am certain. I never can forget the night that his poor wife rushed into my room at Pisa, with a face as pale as marble, and terror impressed on her brow, demanding, with all the tragic impetuosity of grief and alarm, where was her husband? Vain were all our efforts to calm her, a desperate sort of courage seemed to give her energy to confront the horrible fate that awaited her: it was the courage of despair. I have seen nothing in tragedy or on the stage so powerful, or so affecting, as her appearance, and it often presents itself to my memory. I knew nothing then of the catastrophe, but the vividness of her terror communicated itself to me, and I feared the worst,—which fears were, alas! too soon fearfully realized!"—Countess of Blessington's Convers. with Lord Byron.

According to Mr. Trelawny's Recollections, his lordship was no loser by Shelley's "simplicity" and "total want of worldly wisdom." Let us now consider his productions:

1. Queen Mab, 1813, 8vo: privately printed without a title-page, 1821, 8vo: surreptitiously published, and the issue disavowed by the author in a letter to the Examiner, (q. v.) with Notes, Lon., 1821, 8vo; 1829, 8vo. Notices of this incongruous mixture of poetry, profanity, and nonsense will be found in Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1821, 305; Lon. Athen., 1832, 473, n.; Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 193, 210, lxxv. 516. See, also, Reply to the Anti-Matrimonial Hypothesis and supposed Atheism of Percy Bysshe Shelley, as laid down in Queen Mab, 1821, 8vo, pp. iv., 76. It is sufficient to say of Queen Mab that it is an effusion which no man should have written, no publisher should circulate, and no family library should contain. The legal proceedings connected with its late republication, and Sir T. N. Talfourd's speech on this subject, are familiar to many of our readers.

The following Preface to recent editions of Shelley's Poetical Works displays a degree of hardihood which may well excite our "special wonder."

"At my request, the Publisher has restored omitted passages of Queen Mab. I now present this edition as a complete collection of my husband's Poetical Works, and I do not foresee that I can hereafter add to, or take away, a word or line"—MRS. SHELLEY.

"Would"—as Ben Jonson said of Shakspeare—"would you had blotted a thousand!" Truly, "the evil that men do lives after them."

2. Alastor, or, The Spirit of Solitude; and other Poems, 1816, or. 8vo. Reviewed in Blackw. Mag., vi. 148. 3. "We Pity the Plumage, but Forget the Dying Bird:" an Address to the People on the Death of the Princess Charlotte, by the Hermit of Marlow, no imprint, (1817,) 8vo, pp. 16. Privately printed. 4. History of a Six Weeks' Tour through a Part of France, Switzerland, &c. (anon.,) Lon., 1817, 12mo, again, Lumley, s. a. 5. Laon and Cythna; or, The Revolution of the Golden City; a Vision of the Nineteenth Century, in the Stanza of Spenser, 1818, 8vo; again, 8vo, and 1829, 8vo. Immediately recalled, and, with some alterations, issued as The Revolt of Islam; a Poem, in Twelve Cantos, 1818, 8vo. Reviewed with great severity in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxi. 460. The reviewer (erroneously supposed by Shelley to be Robert Southey: see Southey's Life and Correspondence, chap. xxv., and Shelley Memorials, 1859) was attacked by Blackw. Mag., vi. 153, and in that periodical, vol. iv. 475, will be found an elaborate critique on the poem:

"His praise," remarks his reviewer, "is, in our judgment, that of having poured over his narrative a very rare strength and abundance of poetic imagery and feeling,—of having steeped every word in the essence of his inspiration."

See, also, Hunt's Foliage, and National Magazine.

6. Rosalind and Helen, with other Poems, 1819, 8vo; 1823, 8vo. See Blackw. Mag., v. 268, and vi. 148. 7. The Cenci; a Tragedy, in Five Acts, 1819, 8vo, 2d ed.,

1820, (some 1821), 8vo. We have already expressed our disapproval of the revival of this shameful story, (see Monrt, Luter, No. 3.) The great power with which it is dramatized by Shelley is therefore deeply to be regretted. In the name of decency, morality, and religion, is there not enough that is "pure, lovely, and of good report," wherewith to entertain our leisure hours, without exhuming these abominations of the past? See Blackw. Mag., lxx. 595.

Sir John Simeon has recently (1860) privately printed for antiquaries (not splendidly published for family libraries, as is Shelley's poetical version) a contemporary account, in Italian, of the murder of Cenci and the execution of his wife and children.

8. Prometheus Unbound; a Lyrical Drama; and other Poems, 1820, (some 1821), 8vo; again, Hunt & Co., 9s, with Illustrations by J. N. Paton, 1844, ob. 4to.

* Read it through without stopping, and then re-read various passages, and admired and wondered at the performance. . . . One is confounded at the author's mixture of good and bad taste. . . . The extraordinary profanity with which he introduces the most sacred subject has at once and completely annihilated the poem, so far as the public generally are concerned" — Portfolio of a Man of the World, June, 1823. Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1848, 160.

In 1852 much interest was excited by the publication of Letters of Percy Bysshe Shelley, with an Introduction by Robert Browning, p. 8vo. The interest, however, declined—naturally enough—when the Letters proved to be forgeries. See the history of the affair, so far as known, in Lon. Athen., 1852, 214, 278, 301, 325, 355, 381, 431; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 173, 205, 230, 239, 241, 254, 279, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1852, i. 378, Westm. Rev., N. S., i. 502.

The compiler was stupid enough to borrow a part of one of his "genuine Letters" from an article of Sir Francis Palgrave's in Lon. Quar. Rev., Sept. 1840, 313–54, on The Fine Arts in Florence.

"The Odes to the Skylark and The Cloud, in the opinion of many critics, bear a purer poetical stamp than any other of his productions. They were written as his mind prompted, listening to the carolling of the bird aloft in the azure sky of Italy, or marking the cloud as it sped across the heavens, while he floated in his boat on the Thames. No poet was ever warmed by a more genuine and unforced inspiration. His extreme sensibility gave the intensity of passion to his intellectual pursuits, and rendered his mind keenly alive to every perception of outward objects, as well as to his internal sensations. Such a gift is, among the sad vicissitudes of human life, the disappointments we meet, and the galling sense of our own mistakes and errors, fraught with pain to escape from such, he delivered up his soul to poetry, and felt happy when he sheltered himself from the influence of human sympathies in the wildest regions of fancy."—Mrs Shelley Pref to Shelley's Poet Works

"It is needless to disguise the fact, and it accounts for all—his mind was diseased he never knew, even from boyhood, what it was to breathe the atmosphere of healthy life, to have the mens sana in corpore sano. His sensibilities were over-acute, his morality was thoroughly morbid, his metaphysical speculations illogical, incongruous, incomprehensible—like baseless and objectless. The suns and systems of his universe were mere nebule, his continents were a chaos of dead matter, his oceans 'a world of waters, and without a shore.' It is gratuitous absurdity to call his mystical speculations a search after truth; they are no such thing, and are as little worth the attention of reasoning and responsible man as the heterogeneous reveries of nightmare."—D. M. Moir Sketches of the Poet Lat of the Past Half-Century, 3d ed., 1866, 231, 232.

"Percy Bysshe Shelley was a man of far superior powers to Keats. He had many of the faculties of a great poet. He was, however, we verily believe it now, scarcely in his right mind."

—Poor John Wilson Hackw Mag, Jan 1826, Pref., xxvii
"He has the art of using the stateliest words and the most learned idioms without incurring the charge of pedantry, so that passages of more splendid and sonorous writing are not to be selected from any writer since the days of Milton, and yet, when he descends from his ideal worlds, and comes home to us in our humble bowers, and in yearning after love and affection, he attunes the most natural feelings to a style so proportionate, and withal to a modulation so truly musical, that there is nothing to surpass it in the lyrics of Beaumont and Fletcher."—LEIGH HUNT

"I can no more understand Shelley than you can. His poetry is thin-sown with profit or delight. For his theories and nostrums, they are oracular enough, but I either comprehend 'em not, or there is 'miching malice' and mischief in 'em; but, for the most part, ringing with their own emptiness. Has litt said well of 'em, 'Many are the wiser or better for reading Shelley'—Charles Lamb to Bernard Barton, August, 1824 Talfourd's Lamb

"Shelley's poetry was icy cold to him, [Charles Lamb,] except one or two of the minor poems, in which he could not help admiring the exquisite beauty of the expression"—Sir T. N. Talfourd's Character of Lamb

"Many of his contemporaries, and nearly all the poetical writers of any eminence since his time, bear visible traces of how much they imbibed themselves with Shelley's poetry. I will mention, as instances of this, Keats, Miss Landon, Monckton Milnes, Browning, and Tennyson. No one, indeed, who is unacquainted with Shelley can be aware of the full richness and melody of our language"—SIR E. S. CREASY Elomans Percy Bysshe Shelley, 1856

"The strong imagination of Shelley made him an idolater in his own despite. Out of the most indefinite terms of a hard, cold, dark, metaphysical system, he made a gorgeous Pantheon, full of beautiful, majestic, and life-like forms. He turned atheism itself into a mythology, rich with visions as glorious as the gods that live in the marble of Phidias, or the Virgin saints that smile on us from the canvas of Murillo. The Spirit of Beauty, the Principle of Good, the Principle of Evil, when he treated of them, ceased to be abstractions. They took shape and colour. They were no longer mere words, but 'intelligible forms,' 'fair humanities,' objects of love, of adoration, or of fear. As there can be no stronger sign of a mind destitute of the poetical faculty than that tendency which was so common among the writers of the French school to turn images into abstractions,—Venus, for example, into Love, Minerva into Wisdom, Mars into War, and Bacchus into festivity,—so there can be no stronger sign of a mind truly poetical than a disposition to reverse this abstracting process, and to make individuals out of generalities. Some of the metaphysical and ethical theories of Shelley were certainly most absurd and pernicious. But we doubt whether any modern poet has possessed in an equal degree the highest qualities of the great ancient masters. The words bard and inspiration, which seem so cold and affected when applied to other modern writers, have a perfect propriety when applied to him. He was not an author, but a bard. His poetry seems not to have been an art, but an inspiration. Had he lived to the full age of man, he might not improbably have given to the world some great work of the very highest rank in design and execution. But, alas,

Dr. Thehuper, who died in 1867, had in his library the following editions of Don Quixote: 400 in Spanish, 200 in English, 168 in French, 81 in Portuguese, 96 in Italian, 70 in German, 4 in Russian, 4 in Greek, 8 in Polish, 6 in Danish, 13 in Swedish and Latin.

Herr Hartzenbusch bestowed great pains upon a new edition of Don Quixote, collating early editions and a number of MSS. in the Escurial and National Library of Madrid; and among the Parisian gift-books of the winter of 1866-67, published by Haschette & Co., was a grand edition in 2 volumes folio, of the famous re-maise, with nearly 400 illustration by Gustave Doré. Doré also designed the dresses and scenery for M. Sardou's drama founded on Don Quixote, announced for presentation at the Gymnase Theatre, Paris, in 1864.

Shenstone, William, 1714-1768, first saw the light on the patrimonial estate which his taste afterwards made so famous.—The Leasowes, Hales Owen, Shropshire. In 1732 he was entered of Pembroke College, Oxford, and

"here, it appears, he found delight and advantage; for he continued his name in the book ten years, though he took no degree. After the first four years he put on the civilian's gown, but without showing any intention to engage in the profession."

Mr Dolman, to whose care he was indebted for his ease and leisure, died in 1745, and the care of his own fortune now fell upon himself. He tried to escape it awhile, and lived at his house with his tenants, who were distantly related, but, finding that imperfect possession inconvenient, he took the whole estate into his own hands, more to the improvement of its beauty than the increase of its produce. Now was excited his delight in rural pleasures, and his ambition of rural elegance began from this time to point his prospects, to diversify his surface, to entangle his walks, and to wind his waters; which he did with such judgment and such fancy as made his little domain the envy of the great and the admiration of the skilful,—a place to be visited by travellers and copied by designers.—DR JOHNSON'S Life of Shenstone. See CUNNINGHAM'S ed. of Johnson's Lives, 1854, iii. 295-304.

He subjected himself to some pecuniary inconvenience by his lavish expenditures on his favourite acres, but the investment seems not to have been a losing one to the estate:

"In the value of purchase, how much Mr Shenstone's estate was improved by his taste, will be judged from the price it fetched when sold by auction in 1795, being £17,000 sterling; though when it descended to him it was only valued at 3000 a year."—Bishop Percy to Dr Anderson.

But, alas! its glory has departed:

"The Leasowes now belongs to the Attwood family, and a Miss Attwood resides there occasionally; but the whole place bears the impress of desertion and neglect. The house has a dull look; the same heavy spirit broods over the lawns and glades, and it is only when you survey it from a distance, as when approaching Halesowen from Hagley, that the whole presents an aspect of unusual beauty."—Howitt's Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets, 1847, vol. i.

If it were possible for the poet to return, that would be a melancholy ode which should record Leasowes Revisited!

2. The Judgment of Hercules, a Poem, Lon., 1741, 8vo. Anon.

"I never inquire how my poem takes, and am afraid to do so. However, I find some do allow it to be Mallet's."

3. The School-Mistress; a Poem: in Imitation of Spenser, 1742, 8vo. The first sketch appeared in No. 1. The edition of 1742 contains 28 stanzas, the late editions have 35. Two of the first 28 were omitted.

"The 'Schoolmistress,' of which I know not what claim it has to stand among the Moral Works, is surely the most pleasing, of Shenstone's performances."—DR JOHNSON'S Life of Shenstone.

The "moral" nomenclature was Dodsley's blunder: see, in Disraeli's Curiousities of Literature, Shenstone's "luciferous index" added "purely to show (fools) that I am in jest." (Shenstone's Letters.)

"This poem is one of those happinesses in which a poet excels himself, as there is nothing in all Shenstone which any way approaches it in merit; and though I dislike the imitations of our old English poets in general, yet on this minute subject the simplicity of the style produces a very judicious solemnity."—Goldsmith's Works, by Cunningham, iii. 436.

After his death appeared (4) Works in Prose and Verse, most of which were never before Printed, 1764, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1765; 3d ed., with Familiar Letters, (also sep., 1769, 8vo.), 1768, 3 vols. 12mo; 4th ed., 1773, 3 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1777, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. An edit. was pub. at Edin., 1784, 2 vols. 18mo. Poetical Works, with Life, [by R. Dodsley,] Lon., 1804, 32mo; Essays on Men and Manners, with Life by Dr Johnson, and Character by R. Dodsley, 32mo, and a new edit. of his Poetical Works and Ballads, with Life, Critical Dissertation, and Explanatory Notes, by Rev. George Gilfillan, Edin., 1854, 8vo. New edition of his Essays on Men and Manners, Lon., 1868, cr. 8vo. (Bradbury's Handy Volume Series.)

"The general recommendation of Shenstone is easiness and simplicity, his general defect is want of comprehension and variety. Had his mind been better stored with knowledge, whether he could have been given I know not, he could certainly have been agreeable."—DR JOHNSON'S Life of Shenstone: (q. v. for notices of his Elegies, Lyric Poems, Pastoral Ballad, Levities, Choice of Hercules, Fate of Delicacy, and Love and Honour, and see Croker's Boswell a Johnson, Index.)

"His poems are indifferent and tasteless, except his Pastoral Ballad, his Lines on Jenny Dawson, and his schoolmistress which last is a perfect piece of writing."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VI.

"Poor Shenstone was labouring through his whole life to write a perfect song, and, in my opinion at least, never once succeeded, not better than Pope did in a St. Cecilia Ode."—Horace Walpole to J. Pinkerton, Oct. 6, 1784. Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 509.

"His genius is not forcible, but it settles in mediocrity without meanness."—CAMPBELL: Essay on Eng. Poetry.

"I have read an octavo volume of Shenstone's Letters. His correspondence is about nothing else but this place [The Leasowes] and his own writings, with two or three neighbouring clergymen, who wrote verses too."—GRAY.

"I have got two more volumes of Shenstone's 'Correspondence,' and they are like all the rest, insipidity itself."—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Mason, Jan. 24, 1778. Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 24. See, also, v. 169.

"His Letters show him to have lived in a continual fever of petty vanity, and to have been a finished literary coquet."—HAZLITT: Lects., &c., at supra.

Shepard, Thomas, born at Towcester, Northamptonshire, 1603, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, (B A 1623, M.A. 1627,) after officiating as Lec-

1630, emigrated to Boston, Mass., Oct. 1635, succeeded Rev. Thomas Hooker (whose daughter he married in 1637) as pastor at Newton, (now Cambridge,) Mass.,

2, 1649.

He was "a just man and a holy," and many "heard him gladly" and "rejoiced in his light." A collective "Various testimonies have been tendered on both sides of Sheridan, Frances, mother of R. B. Sheridan, born in Ireland, 1724, died at Blois, 1766, the daughter of Dr. Philip Chamberlaine, attracted the attention of her future husband, Thomas Sheridan, by a pamphlet in his favour published during a warm controversy relative to the theatre in Dublin, in which he was largely interested. Previously to this, at the early age of fifteen, she composed a romance, in two volumes, entitled Eugenia and Adelaide. Long afterwards it was adapted for the stage, as a comic drama, by Mrs. Sheridan's eldest daughter, Mrs. Lefanu, and was subsequently acted with success at Dublin. She afterwards gave to the world: 1. Memoirs of Miss Sidney Biddulph, extracted from her own Journal, and now first published, Lon., 1761, 3 vols. 12mo; in French, Mémoires d'une jeune Dame, by the Abbé Prevost. Vols. iii. and iv., in English, were pub. in 1767, new ed. of the whole, 1772, 5 vols. 12mo. This novel, of the Richardson school, was very successful both in English and French: part of it was dramatized.

"Greatly superior to most of the productions of her brother Novelists."—Lon. Month Rev., April, 1761, 266

"Some of us can remember the great popularity which it acquired, and the great avidity with which it was read."—Ibid., July, 1824, 267.

"A novel of great merit . . . Johnson paid her this high compliment upon it: 'I know not, Madam, that you have a right, upon moral principles, to make your readers suffer so much.'"—Boswell: Croker's Boswell's Johnson, chap. xiv., xv

Lord North commended the work, and Charles James Fox:

"thought Sidney Biddulph the best novel of our age. Sheridan ['in the heat of an argument'] denied having read it, though the plot of his School for Scandal was borrowed from it. The close of the second part very excellent"—Recollections, by S. Rogers, 1859, 80, 68.

2. The Discovery; a Comedy, 1763, 8vo. Successful. The principal part was performed by Garrick, who considered the play one of the best pieces he had ever read. See Blackw. Mag., xx, 26, 27. 3. The Dupe; a Comedy, 1764, 8vo. 4. The History of Nourjahad; a Romance, Lon., 1788, 8vo. Dramatized by Sophie Lee, one of the authoresses of the Canterbury Tales. Mrs. Sheridan intended it as the first of a series of moral fictions.

"Her last work is perhaps her best,—Nourjahad, an Eastern tale in which a pure morality is inculcated with a great deal of fancy and considerable force."—J. W. CROKER. Boswell's Johnson, chap. xiv., n

Mrs. Sheridan also wrote a play called The Trip to Bath. It was never acted nor published, but is supposed to have been laid under contribution by her son in The Rivals. In Dyce's Specimens of British Poetesses will be found some verses of this lady's, of which a late critic remarks,

"The verses of Mrs. Sheridan, mother of the famous Sheridan, and author of 'Sidney Biddulph,' are not so good as her novels."—LEIGH HUNT Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.

Sheridan, Miss Louisa Henrietta, was married to Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Wyatt, Sept. 8, 1840, and d. at Paris, Oct. 2, 1841. Miss Sheridan was for some years the editor and chief author of The Comic Offering, or Ladies' Melange of Literary Mirth, which was commenced in 1831, and edited The Diadem, a Book for the Boudoir, Lon., 1838, 4to.

Sheridan, Rt. Hon. Richard Brinsley Butler, M. P., September, 1751–July 7, 1816, the son of Thomas Sheridan, the actor, elocutionist, and lexicographer, (infra), and Frances Sheridan, the novelist and dramatist, (supra), first opened his eyes on the light in Dorset Street, Dublin, and was baptized on the 4th of October at St. Mary's Church. At the age of seven he was, with his elder brother Charles, (supra), placed under the care of Samuel Whyte, already chronicle by us (p. 1354, supra) as the "guide, philosopher, and friend" of Sheridan's biographer, Thomas Moore. Here his progress was not remarkable.

"It may be consoling," says Mr. Moore, "to parents who are in the first crisis of impatience at the sort of hopeless stupidity which some children exhibit, to know that the dawn of Sheridan's intellect was as dull and unpromising as its meridian day was bright, and that in the year 1759 he who in less than thirty years afterwards held senates enchained by his eloquence, and audiences fascinated by his wit, was, by common consent both of parents and preceptor, pronounced to be 'a most impenetrable dunce.'"—Memoirs of Sheridan

But in 1762, when the supposed "impenetrable dunce" was sent to Harrow, the Head-Master, Dr. Summer, and one of the ushers, afterwards the famous Dr. Samuel Parr, "penetrated" that genius which they found themselves unable to develop.

He left Harrow when about eighteen, and at this time, although unable to spell English, displayed evidences of some progress in Greek. In conjunction with his friend H. Halhed, he had made translations of the seventh Idyl and many of the lesser poems of Theocritus; and to these they soon afterwards added English versions of the Love Epistles of Aristonetus. The latter have been recently published in the same volume (Bohn's Classical Library, No. LX., edited by Walter K. Kelly, 1854, p. 8vo) with the Elegies of Propertius, the Satyron of Petronius Arbitor, and the Kisses of Johannes Secundus: "a collection which should be placed next" to the plays of Congreve, Farquhar, Vanbrugh, and Wycherley on the first back-log which cheers the winter's hearth. The literary copartnership was carried on in 1770, when Halhed was at Oxford, attending to his studies, and Sheridan in London, neglecting his. The firm also produced a play, in three acts, called Jurifer, (an imitation of the burletta of Midas, one number (written by Sheridan) of a periodical miscellany, and projects (also Sheridan) and's) of a collection of Occasional Poems and a volume of Cray Tales. None of these, however, were given to the world, save the Love Epistles before noticed, which were published in an octavo volume in August, 1771, (see Nichols's Lit. Anec., viii. 365.)—published, but not sold; and great was the disappointment of the youthful authors. An agreeable relief, however, was at hand; they both fell in love,—and both with the same lady; and Charles Sheridan, Richard's brother, with many others, bowed, at the same time, at the same shrine. The object of all this worship was Miss Linley, "The Maid of Bath," the far-famed leader of the "singing men and singing women" of that age.

"Her personal charms, the exquisites of her musical talents, and the full light of publicity which her profession threw upon both," remarks Mr. Moore, "naturally attracted round her a crowd of admirers, in whom the sympathy of common pursuit soon kindled into rivalry, till she became at length an object of vanity as well as of love. Her extreme youth, too, (for she was little more than sixteen when Sheridan first met her,) must have removed, even from minds the most fastidious and delicate, that repugnance they might have justly felt to her profession if she had lived much longer under its tarnishing influence, or lost, by frequent exhibitions before the public, that fine gloss of feminine modesty, for whose absence not all the talents and accomplishments of the whole sex can atone."

See, also, Original Letter from Miss Linley, in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1825, ii. 287-296, which contains a curious account of Mathews, with whom Sheridan fought two duels.

The fair cantatrice was already engaged to an elderly admirer, Mr. Long, of Wiltshire, but he proved more reasonable and generous than disappointed lovers are generally found: he not only released the damsel, but settled on her the sum of £3000, on the interest of which Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan (for she married our author in France in March, 1772, and the ceremony was repeated in England in April, 1773) principally subsisted for the first few years after their union. A few weeks previous to this event, Sheridan had been entered a student of the Middle Temple; and an income from a profession—for he would not permit his wife to exorcise her profession—would have been a great addition to the happiness of the young people: a "law student," however, he cannot fairly be styled, and he was never called to the Bar. He now applied himself to dramatic composition, and in January, 1775, produced at Covent Garden his first comedy,—The Rivals,—which, after being damned the first night in consequence of the bad acting of Mr. Lee in Sir Lucius O'Trigger, took the town by storm. Sir Lucius, Sir Anthony Absolute, Captain Absolute, Falkland, Bob Acres, Fag, Lydia Languish, and Mrs. Malaprop, became domesticated in the household circle, quoted in the parks, parodied in the streets, plagiarized at the Clubs, and not unknown either to the Lords or the Commons. If the admirers of Humphrey Clinker imagined that they detected the rhetoric of Matthew Bramble in the declamation of Absolute, and the oratory of Mrs. Winifred Jenkins or of Mrs. Tabitha Bramble in the tropes of Mrs. Malaprop, the reunion was a source of pleasure rather than of complaint. In this year, also, he composed St. Patrick's Day; or, The Soheming Lieutenant. Thus encouraged, the fortunate author devoted the ensuing summer to the composition of The Duenna, the success of which was unequalled. The Beggar's Opera (see GAY, JOHN, p. 656, supra) had a run of sixty-three nights; The Duenna, first produced November 21, 1775, was played for seventy-five nights, without any intermission save a few days at Christmas and the Fridays in each week. About the close of this year Sheridan proposed to purchase Mr. Garrick's share in the patent of Drury Lane Theatre, (the contract was perfected in June, 1776,) of which he eventually became patentee and manager.

On the 24th of February, 1777, he brought out, at Drury Lane, A Trip to Scarborough, (altered from Vanbrugh's comedy of The Relapse), and on the 8th of May ensuing carried his fame to its height by The School for Scandal,—"a sort of El Dorado of wit," says Moore, "where the precious metal is thrown about by all classes as carelessly as if they had not the least idea of its value."

"I have seen Sheridan's new comedy, [The School for Scandal], and liked it much better than any I have seen since The Provoked Husband. There is a great deal of wit and good situations; but it is too long, has two or three bad scenes that might easily be omitted, and seemed to me to want nature and truth of character, but I have not read it, and sat too high to hear it well."—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Mason, May 16, 1776. Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 67.

"As regards to the theatre, I have read the 'School for Scandal'; it is rapid and lively, but is far from containing the wit I expected from seeing it acted."—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, May, 1780. Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 380.

It has been newly translated into German, and is now (1869) having a great run in the German theatres.

As in The Rivals Smollett had been laid under contribution, in this last great triumph the graphic genius of Fielding had not been neglected,—and Tom Jones and Bliffl greeted their old acquaintances in the characters of Charles and Joseph Surface. These, and the other prominent dramatic personæ, Sir Peter, Sir Oliver, Sir Benjamin, Snake, Crabtree, Mrs. Candour, and Lady Sneerwell, for a long time after the first consecutive representations of the play, for two or three nights in each week delighted or disgusted, according to their respective merits or demerits, the play-goers of the great metropolis, and in due season were introduced to the provincial towns. In 1779 he presented his audience with The Critic,—

"in some of its most admired passages little better than an exquisite cento of the wit of the satirists before him. Sheridan must have felt himself emphatically at home in a production of this kind, for there was every call in it upon the powers he abounded in,—wit, banter, and style,—and none upon his good nature."—LIGHT HUNTER Critical Sketch prefixed to Sheridan's Dramatic Works, 1841, r. 8vo

The fact that Sir Fretful Plagiary was supposed to be the representation of Cumberland the dramatist, contributed not a little to the success of this witty performance.

"I have read Sheridan's 'Critic', but, not having seen it, for they say it is admirably acted, it appeared wondrously flat and old, and a poor imitation. It makes me fear I shall not be so much charmed with 'The School for Scandal', on reading, as I was when I saw it."—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, Dec. 11, 1779. Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 201.

We may here close Sheridan's dramatic record—two or three minor pieces are unnoticed—by a reference to his last essays in this line, The Stranger, and Pizarro, adaptations from the plays of Kotzebue.

Through the influence of Mr. Fox, Sheridan came into Parliament in 1780, as member for Stafford, and he zealously, and sometimes efficiently, supported the principles of the Whigs. Under the Rockingham administration, in March, 1782, he was Under-Secretary of State, but resigned on the death of the marquis in July of the same year. On the death of Pitt, in 1806, he became Treasurer of the Navy; but a change of affairs placed him on the opposite side of the House. He was defeated at the Westminster election in 1807, and lost his seat in Parliament in 1812. In 1792 death deprived him of his wife, whom Wilkes calls "the most modest, pleasing, and delicate flower he had seen." In 1795 he married Miss Ogle, daughter of the Dean of Westminster, "young, accomplished, and ardently devoted to him," and with the substantial recommendation of £5000. But this small sum, and many other sums, contributed by his friends and raised by various devices, afforded but temporary relief to one of his extravagant and careless habits: his latter years were embittered by a ceaseless contest with his many debtors, and he died, July 7, 1816, in the midst of mortifications and embarrassments which are graphically depicted in the pages of Mr. Moore. The reader of these, however, will do less than justice if he fail to compare with them the explanatory statements of Mr. J. W. Croker, in the London Quarterly Review for March, 1826, 561-93.

SHERIDAN THE DRAMATIC POET.

"Mr Sheridan has been justly called 'a dramatic star of the first magnitude,' and, indeed, among the comic writers of the last century he shines like Hesperus among the lesser lights." He has left four dramas behind him, all different or of different kinds, and all excellent in their way: 'The School for Scandal,' 'The Rivals,' 'The Duenna,' and 'The Critic' . . . This is the merit of Sheridan's comedies, that every thing in them tells—there is no labour in vain. His comic muse does not go prying about into obscure corners, or collecting idle curiosities, but shows her laughing face, and points to her rich treasure,—the follies of mankind. She is garlanded and crowned with roses and vine-leaves. Her eyes sparkle with delight, and her heart runs over with good-natured malice. Her step is firm and light, and her ornaments consummate! 'The School for Scandal' is, if not the most original, perhaps the most finished and faultless comedy which we have. When it is acted, you hear people all around you exclaiming, 'Surely it is impossible for any thing to be cleverer!' . . . 'The Rivals' is one of the most agreeable comedies we have. In the elegance and brilliancy of the dialogue, in a certain animation of moral sentiment, and in the masterly dénouement of the fable, 'The School for Scandal' is superior; but 'The Rivals' has more life and action in it, and abounds in a greater number of whimsical characters, unexpected incidents, and absurd contrasts of situation. . . . 'The Duenna' is a perfect work of art. It has the utmost sweetness and point. The plot, the characters, the dialogue, are all complete in themselves, and they are all his own; and the songs are the best that ever were written, except those in 'The Beggar's Opera.' They have a jovious spirit of intoxication in them, and a strain of the most melting tenderness."—HARLETT Lects on the Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. VIII.

"The comedy of the fourth period is chiefly remarkable for exhibiting The Rivals and The School for Scandal. Critics prefer the latter; while the general audience reap, perhaps, more pleasure from the former, the pleasantries being of a more general cast, the incidents more complicated and varied, and the whole plot more interesting. In both these plays, the gentlemanlike ease of Farquhar is united with the wit of Congreve. Indeed, the wit of Sheridan, though equally brilliant with that of his celebrated predecessor, flows so easily, and is so happily elicited by the tone of the dialogue, that in admiring its sparkles we never once observe the stroke of the flint which produces them. Wit and pleasantries seemed to be the natural atmosphere of this extraordinary man, whose history was at once so brilliant and so melancholy."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Essay on the Drama, in Encyc. Brit.; and in his Miscell. Prose Works. "At the same age with Congreve he composed comedies of similar, and one of almost equal, merit: like his great master, he neglected incident and character, and sought only brilliancy of dialogue: what he sought he attained, even to excess; and his wit was a rattle enough to betray him into the splendid fault of rendering his dialogue more dazzling and poignant than suited his own personages, or indeed any human conversation."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Life, ii. chap. iii.

"There is too much merely ornamental dialogue, and, with some very fine rhetorical situations, too much intermission in the action and business of the play; and, above all, there is too little real warmth of feeling, and too few indications of noble or serious passion, thoroughly to satisfy the wants of English readers and spectators—even in a comedy. Their wit [that of The Rivals and The School for Scandal] is the best of them."—LORD JEFFREY, Edin. Rev., Dec. 1826, 7.

"The dramas of Sheridan . . . have placed him at the head of the genteel comedy of England, and while truth of character and manners, chastised brilliancy of wit, humour devoid of the least stain of coarseness, exquisite knowledge of stage-effect, and consummate ease and elegance of idiomatic language are appreciated, there can be no doubt that the name of Sheridan will maintain its place."—J. WILSON CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1826, 592.

"The Duenna is formed after the fashion of Gay; of whom it falls farther short than 'The School for Scandal' does of Congreve. That his plays were great productions for any age, astonishing for a youth of twenty-three and twenty-five, is unquestionable."—LORD BROUGHAM States Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, i. 292, and in Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, i. 306.

"No writers have injured the Comedy of England so deeply as Congreve and Sheridan. Both were men of splendid wit and polished taste. Unhappily, they made all their characters in their own likeness. Their works bear the same relation to the legitimate drama which a transparency bears to a painting. There are no delicate touches, no hues imperceptibly fading into each other: the whole is lighted up with an universal glare. Outlines and tints are forgotten in the common blaze which illuminates all. The flowers and fruits of the intellect abound; but it is the abundance of a jungle, not of a garden,—unwholesome, bewildering, unprofitable for its very plenty, rank from its very fragrance. Every top, every boor, every valet, is a man of wit. The very butts and dupes, Tattle, Witwound, Puff, Acres, outshine the whole Hotel of Rambouillet."—LORD MACAULAY: Macmillan's Edin. Rev., March, 1827, and in his Collected Essays, ed. 1854, i. 84.

SHERIDAN THE ORATOR.

"His reputation as an orator may be said to rest substantially on his two speeches against Mr. Warren Hastings, and it unfortunately happens, as we have already hinted, that both of these are miserably reported in the parliamentary debates. When he delivered those far-famed philippics, he was a new man in St. Stephen's,—the extent of his genius and the truth of his character were yet to be developed, and we must be permitted to doubt whether, if he had spoken the same words a few years later, the world would have heard so much about the matter. Whenever Sheridan attempts any serious passion in his dramas, he fails deplorably, and his life was a jest—is it possible that he could ever command, or at least sustain, that genial enthusiasm without which declamation may flourish, but oratory cannot be?"—J. WILSON CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1826, 593.

"Sheridan's speech on the Begums in the House of Commons admirable, in Westminster Hall, contemptible. I heard both."—LORD GRENVILLE: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 181.

The Second Bogum Speech was made in Westminster Hall, June 3 et seq., 1788, the First Bogum Speech (for a written copy of which Sheridan refused the offer of £1000) was delivered in the House of Commons, Feb. 7, 1787; and on the latter we quote some opinions:

"Mr. Burke declared it to be 'the most astonishing effort of eloquence, argument, and wit united, of which there was any record or tradition.' Mr. Fox said, 'All that he had ever heard, all that he had ever read, when compared with it, dwindled into nothing, and vanished like vapour before the sun,' and Mr. Pitt acknowledged 'that it surpassed all the eloquence of ancient or modern times, and possessed every thing that genius or art could furnish, to agitate and controul the human mind.'"—MOORE: Memoirs of Sheridan.

"A speech which was so imperfectly reported that it may be said to be wholly lost, but which was, without doubt, the most elaborately brilliant of all the productions of his ingenious mind. The impression which it produced was such as has never been equalled. He sat down, not merely amidst cheering, but amidst the loud clapping of hands, in which the lords held the bar and the strangers in the gallery joined. The excitement of the House was such that no other speaker could obtain a hearing, and the debate was adjourned. The ferment spread fast through the town. Within four-and-twenty hours, Sheridan was offered a thousand pounds for the copyright of the speech, if he would himself correct it for the press. The impression made by this remarkable display of eloquence on severe and experienced critics, whose discernment may be supposed to have been quickened by emulation, was deep and permanent. Mr. Windham, twenty years later, said that the speech deserved all its fame, and was, in spite of some faults of taste, such as were seldom wanting either in the literary or in the parliamentary performances of Sheridan, the finest that had been delivered within the memory of man. Mr. Fox about the same time, being asked by the late Lord Holland what was the best speech ever made in the House of Commons, assigned the first place, without hesitation, to the great Oration of Sheridan on the Oude Charge."—LORD MACAULAY: Warren Hastings: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841, and in his Collected Essays.

"His most celebrated speech was certainly the one upon the 'Begum Charge,' in the proceedings against Hastings; and nothing can exceed the accounts left us of its unprecedented success. All men on all sides vied with each other in extolling so wonderful a performance. Nevertheless, the opinion has now become greatly prevalent that a portion of this success was owing to the speech having so greatly surpassed all the speaker's former efforts; to the extreme interest of the topics which the subject naturally presented; and to the artist-like elaboration and beautiful delivery of certain fine passages, rather than to the merits of the whole. Certain it is that the repetition of great part of it, presented in the short-hand notes of the speech on the same charge in Westminster, disappoints every reader who has heard of the success of the earlier effort. In truth, Mr. Sheridan's taste was very far from being chaste, or even moderately correct; he delighted in gaudy figures; he was attracted by glare, and cared not whether the brilliancy came from tinsel or gold, from broken glass or pure diamond; he overlaid his thoughts with epigrammatic diction; he 'played to the galleries,' and indulged them, of course, with an endless succession of clap-traps. His worst passages by far were those which he evidently preferred himself."—LORD BROUGHAM'S Speeches. Times Geo. III., 204.

"The most deliberate criticism must allow his eloquence to be distinguished by strong sense and brilliant wit; by a vigour of argument not too ingenious for business, nor too subtle for conviction; by a great command of pure English words, and by a vivid power of imagination in those passages which aimed at grandeur and pathos; though they must be owned to be too artificial and ostentatious to produce the highest effect and to be approved by a severe taste."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH'S Life, ii chap. iii.

"There was, undoubtedly, some bombast in Mr. Sheridan's speeches; but they were marked by glowing eloquence, and not unfrequently by brilliant wit. Although some of his jokes were the result of great study, yet, as they were perfect in their kind, and that kind of the very highest, we may forgive the labour. Few men have possessed the power to make such a speech as that which dazzled the House of Commons on the Begum Charge; few ever wrote so good a comedy as 'The School for Scandal.' It is melancholy to reflect that the possessor of such talents should, as it were in mere wantonness, have thrown away the influence which he was so well qualified to exercise over the destiny of his country."—LORD JOHN RUSSELL'S Memoirs, &c. of Thomas Moore, ii., 1853, 187, n. See, also, 192, 196.

"Lord Holland told me a curious piece of sentimentality in Sheridan. The other night we were all delivering our respective and various opinions on him and other hommes marquans, and mine was this: 'Whatever Sheridan has done or chosen to do has been, par excellence, always the best of its kind! He has written the best comedy, (School for Scandal), the best drama, (in my mind, far before that St. Giles's lampoon, The Beggar's Opera), the best farce, (The Critic—it is only too good for a farce), and the best Address, (Monologue on Garrick,) and, to crown all, delivered the very best Oration (the famous Begum Speech) ever conceived or heard in this country.' Somebody told B. this the next day, and on hearing it he burst into tears! Poor Brinsley! If they were tears of pleasure, I would rather have said these few but most sincere words than have written the Illad or made his own celebrated philippic. Nay, his own comedy never gratified me more than to hear that he had derived a moment's gratification from any praise of mine, humble as it must appear to 'my elders and betters.'"—Lord Byron's Journal, Dec 17, 1813. Moore's Byron, ii.

Sheridan left one son, Thomas, by his first wife, and one son, Charles, by his second wife. Charles, who was something of a poet, (ut supra), died recently, unmarried. Thomas, whose wife was an authoress, (ut infra), died Sept. 12, 1817, at the Cape of Good Hope, where he was Colonial Paymaster, (see Lon Gen Mag., Nov. 1817, 471.) He left four sons,—viz. I. Richard Brinsley, M.P. for Dorchester; II. Thomas Berkeley, R.N., d. 1826; III. Francis Cymric, d. 1842; IV. Charles Kenneid, in the diplomatic service,—and three daughters, viz.: I. Helen Selina, married in 1825 to Lord Dufferin and Claneboye, and mother of the present Lord Dufferin, (p. 527, supra); II. Caroline Elizabeth Sarah, married in 1827 to the Hon. George Chapple Norton, (p. 1438, supra); III. Jane Georgiana, married in 1830 to Lord Seymour, since Duke of Somerset.

Sheridan, Thomas, the grandfather of R. B. Sheridan, 1684–1738, a native of the county of Cavan, Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; afterwards received holy orders, and established a school in Dublin; received, through the influence of his friend Swift, a living in the south of Ireland, which he exchanged for one in Dunboyne; lost his chaplaincy to the Lord Lieutenant by choosing for his text on the anniversary of the King's birthday, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof;" subsequently took the Free School at Cavan, sold it for £400, and died in sickness and distress. Lord Cork characterizes him as "st-rtarred, good-natured, and improvident, . . . a punster, a quibbler, a fiddler, and a wit. Not a day passed without a riddle, an anagram, or a madrigal. His pen and his fiddle-stick were in continual motion, and yet to little or no purpose."

Sheridan, Thomas, son of the preceding, godson of Jonathan Swift, father of R. B. Sheridan, and husband of Frances Sheridan, 1721–1788, a native of Quilco, Ireland, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Dublin, and made his first appearance on the stage of the theatre in Smock Alley, Dublin, January, 1743, in the character of Richard III. In 1744 he played at Covent Garden, and in 1745 with Garrick at Drury Lane, and subsequently became—not successfully—a theatrical manager. The great passion of his life from youth up was oratory and the exposition of its supposed advantages to public audiences. His last appearance on the stage occurred in 1776. On the retirement of Garrick, the purchasers of the share in Drury Lane (of whom his son R. B. Sheridan was one) made him manager of the theatre, and this post he retained for three years, after which he returned to his Lectures and his books. On the accession of George III. he was honoured with a pension, which disgusted his fellow-pensioner Dr. Johnson, and elicited an exclamation which Sheridan resented.

"The authors indeed, in the prologue, profess to have adhered to the facts. . . . Sherlock, Thomas, D.D., son of Dean Thomas Sherlock, (supra), was born in London, 1678, and educated at Eton and at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow. Master of the Temple, 1704; Preb. of London, 1713, Master of Catherine Hall, 1714; Dean of Chichester, Nov 1715; Preb. of Norwich, 1719; Bishop of Bangor, Feb. 4, 1727-8; trans. to Salisbury, 1734, and to London, 1748, declined the Archbishopric of Canterbury, 1747; died 1761. Two or three of the Bishop's treatises (to those which form part of the Bangorian controversy a guide is afforded on p. 552) must be specially noticed. 1. The Use and Intent of Prophecy in the Several Ages of the World, to which are added Four Dissertations, 1725, 8vo, (1st Dissert. is not in this, the 1st, ed.;) 4th ed., 1744, 8vo; again, 1755, 8vo; last ed., (Eng. Ch. Lib., vol. xi,) with Pref. by Rev. H. Melvill, 1840, fp. 8vo. See COLLINS, ANTHONY, p. 412, supra; TOWNE, JOHN, No. 2. This work should be read with the first three of Bishop Hurd's Warburton Lectures together they "give a complete illustration of the general idea of prophecy, and lay down such principles for the investigation of the subject as may with ease be applied in refutation of the most specious objections of infidel writers"—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

"The Use and Extent of Prophecy . . . is an excellent performance."—Dr. LELAND. Deist. Writers, ed 1837, 79, (q v)

"Has many good hints"—Bickersteth's C. S., ed 1844, 473 See, also, Farrar's Crit Hist. of Free Thought, 1863, 8vo, Lect V., n. 26.

Conyers Middleton's attack on this work, which was attributed to Sherlock's opposition to his application for the mastership of the Charter-House, (see Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, ix. Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1853, 313,) has been noticed on p. 1275, supra.

"I think it the weakest as well as warmest pamphlet the Dr [Middleton] ever wrote. But I agree with you, there is no harm done. It may be of use to make people understand themselves"—Warburton to Hurd, 11th July, 1750.

2. Trial of the Witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus, 1729, 8vo; 3d ed., 1729, 8vo. Anon. 12th ed., 1748, 8vo, again, 1755; 1786; 18th ed., 1807, 8vo. More than 20 edits have been pub. Dr. Charles Moss's Evidence of the Resurrection Cleared, &c., 1744, 8vo, was repub. as The Sequel to the Trial, &c., revised by the Author of the Trial, &c., 1749, '57, 8vo. The last edits. of The Trial and The Sequel were recently pub. in 1 vol. r. 8vo, by Mr. H. G. Bohn. They are also included in Bohn's vol. of Christian Evidences: see JEVYNS, SOAMER, M P., No. 7; WEST, GILBERT, LL D., No. 3. The Trial was elicited by Woolston's Discourses on the Miracles.

"The Trial of the Witnesses has been very justly admired for the polite and uncommon turn, as well as the judicious way of treating the subject"—Ireland's Deist Writers, 80, (q v)

And see, also, the list of pamphlets on the Resurrection of Christ, in Lowndes's Brit Lib., 986, No 62, and ANNET, PETER, p. 63, supra. The Trial should be in every theological library.

"An able work on this evidence of Scripture"—Bickersteth's C. S., 473

"There is an air of lightness about it, which is perhaps unfavourable to the solemn importance of the subject, but this very lightness, and the mode in which the argument is carried on, produce an interest and an effect which do not always result from more laboured efforts"—Orme's Bibl. Jbh., 402

3. Letters, &c. on the Late Earthquakes, 1750, 4to; Supp., 1750, 4to. More than 100,000 copies of this Letter were sold within a month. It elicited Modest Remarks, &c., by a Quaker, 1750, 8vo. For an account of the earthquakes, see Smollett's History of England, year 1750. Notices of Sherlock will be found in Biog. Brit., Bp. C. Moss's Charge, 1764; Dr. Nicholl's Sermon on Sherlock's death; Nicholl's Lit. Anec. See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 309; NORRIS, CHARLES. But of all that has been said in praise of Sherlock's Sermons, we shall hardly be excused if we quote nothing.

"They contain admirable defences of the truths of religion, and powerful incitements to the practice of it. They rouse the virtues of Christians by proper motives, and put to silence the doubts and cavils of Infidels by most convincing arguments"—Dr. HUGH BLAIR.

"The Sermons of Sherlock, though censured by Mr. Church, are master-pieces of argument and eloquence. His Discourses on Prophecy and the Trial of the Witnesses are perhaps the best defences of Christianity in our language."—Dr. JOSEPH WATSON: ed. of Pope's Works

"Still break the benches, Henley! with thy strain, While Sherlock, Hare, and Gibson preach in vain."

"Bishop Sherlock's discourses are incomparable."—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

"They contain strong arguments, awful representations, exceeding proper for conviction: his style is plain and manly."—Dr. DOUBLEDAY.

"Sherlock's style is very elegant, though he has not made it his principal study."—Dr. JOHNSON. Boswell's Life, year 1778. "Those admirable Sermons, which stand foremost among the brightest ornaments of our theological literature."—Dr. T. S. HUGHES. Biog. Pref. to Sherlock's Works

"Without departing for a moment from the sobriety of an accomplished prose writer, he often produces the effect of the sublimest poetry."—Dr. D. S. WATLAND: Pref. to Sherlock's Discourses.

Dr. Wayland considers him superior to Clark, Tillotson, and Atterbury.

"Sherlock is an oasis in Church literature."—Rev. SYDNEY SMITH.

"The calm and dispassionate disquisition on some text of Scripture, or the discussion of some theological question, henceforward to be the exclusive object of an English sermon, was carried by Sherlock to a perfection rarely rivalled, unless by Smalridge, nearly his own contemporary, and by Horley in more recent times."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1833, 502.

See, also, the Works of Jonathan Edwards, D.D., ed. N. York, 1844, ii. 625.

Sherlock, William, D.D., father of the preceding, was born in Southwark, London, 1641; educated at Eton, and thence removed to Peter-house, Cambridge, 1657; Rector of St. George's, Botolph Lane, London, 1669; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1681; Master of the Temple, 1684; Rector of Therfield, Hertfordshire; at the Revolution refused to take the oaths, and was suspended, but subsequently complied; Dean of St. Paul's, 1691; died 1707. More than sixty publications, chiefly books and pamphlets against Romanism, theological and political tracts, and single sermons from his pen, issued 1674-1706, are enumerated in Watt's Bibl. Brit. Of these we notice: 1. Discourse concerning the Knowledge of Jesus Christ and our Union with Him, Lon., 1674, 8vo. An attack on Dr. John Owen's work on Communion. See ALSOP, VINCENT; POLHILL, EDWARD, No. 2; ROWLES, SAMUEL; Top-lady's Works, (Hervey on Anti-Sorzo.) South declared that Alsop gained a complete victory. Thomas Dawson was one of Sherlock's opponents. 2. Defence and Continuation of No. 1, 1675, 8vo. 3. The Case of Resistance to the Supreme Powers Stated and Resolved, according to the Doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, 1684, 8vo.

"He who has not perused this excellent piece has not, perhaps, read one of the strongest Persuasive to a Religious Life that ever was written in any language"—ANDRISON

5. A Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation of the Son of God, Lon., 1690, '91, '94, 4to.

"With objectionable sentiments. It was animadverted on with bitterness by Dr. South, [Animadversions upon Dr. Sherlock's Book, &c., 1694, 4to.] This led to a defence, and rejoinder, and a censure of Dr. Sherlock's views by the University of Oxford. Mr. Howe wrote a calm inquiry in opposition to Dr. Sherlock's view"—BICKERSTETH.

See, also, Burnet's Own Times, ed. 1833, iv. 390, Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 1114, (List of Pamphlets.) The controversy waxed warm, and was at last closed by the interference of the king.

6. The Case of Allegiance due to Sovereign Powers Stated, 1691, 4to.

"Sherlock took the oaths, and speedily published, in justification of his conduct, a pamphlet entitled The Case of Allegiance to Sovereign Powers Stated. The sensation produced by this work was immense. Dryden's Hind and Panther had not raised so great an uproar. Halifax's Letter to a Dissenter had not called forth so many answers. The replies to the Doctor, the vindications of the Doctor, the pasquinades on the Doctor, would fill a library"—LORD MACAULAY. Hist. of Eng., iv. chap. xvii. "He was a clear, a polite, and a strong writer; . . . but he was apt to assume too much to himself, and to treat his adversaries with contempt: this created him many enemies, and made him pass for an insolent, haughty man"—BISHOP BURNET: Own Times, ed. 1833, iv. 388.

"On moral subjects his arguments are generally strong, exceeding proper for conviction. He is plain and manly, great and animated. His representations are exceeding awful; therefore his 'Death' and 'Judgment' are his best books. His book on 'Providence' is by many thought to be the best on that subject."—DR. DOUGLASS.

Mr. Bickersteth remarks that "Sherlock's practical works are better than his controversial," (C. S., ed. 1844, 455,) and characterizes his treatises on Death, Judgment, and Providence as "practical, though deficient in gospel principles," (Ibid., 502.)

Shirley, James, 1596-1666, a native of London, educated at Merchant Taylors' School, St. John's College, Oxford, and Catherine Hall, Cambridge; took holy orders, and obtained a curacy near St. Alban's, which he resigned in consequence of his conversion to the Roman Catholic Church. He now established a Grammar-School at St. Alban's, which proved unsuccessful, and he removed to London and commenced writing poems and plays. The first of his poems—Eccho, or, The Infortunate Lovers—was pub 1618, 8vo. After producing a number of dramas, his labours were interrupted in 1640 by the Civil War, and he accepted service on the Royalist side, under the Duke of Newcastle. Returning to peaceful pursuits, the ordinance of the Long Parliament and enactments of a similar character, prohibiting the exhibition of "public stage plays," threw him again upon school-teaching as a means of subsistence, and his academy in White Friars turned out many pupils who "afterwards proved most eminent in divers faculties." In 1646 he again resumed the publication of plays and poems. In 1666 he was driven, with his second wife, by the great fire, from their house in Fleet Street into the parish of St. Giles, "where, being in a manner overcome with affrightments, discorulations, and other miseries occasion'd by that fire and their losses, they both died within the compass of a natural day"—Wood Athen Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii. 740.

To Wood's valuable article on Shirley (which includes notices of George Chapman and John Ogilby) we refer the reader for an account of Shirley's plays, (in some of which he was assisted by George Chapman and others,) poems, and grammatical treatises. Since the publication of that work, the edition of Shirley's Works, referred to by Dr. Bliss on col. 744 as in preparation, has appeared, under the following title:

A collective edition of his Poems, concluding with The Triumph of Beattie, was pub. Lon., 1846, 8vo, (see Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 642, 643, 644;) and he pub. Six New Plays, viz.: The Brothers, Sisters, Doubtful Heir, Imposture, Cardinal, and Court Secret, in one vol., in 1653, sm 8vo.

His grammatical treatises were pub. as follows: 1. Via ad Latinam Linguam complanata: The Way made Plain to the Latine Tongue, &c., 1649, 8vo. 2. Grammatica Anglo-Latina: an English and Latin Grammar, &c., 1651, 8vo. 3. The Rudiments of Grammar: The Rules composed in English Verse, &c., 1656, 12mo; 2d ed.,—Manuductio, &c.,—1660, 12mo. 4. Introduction to English, Latin, and Greek, 1656, 8vo. 5. An Essay towards an Universal and Rational Grammar, together with Rules for Learning Latin in English Verse, by Mr Shirley to which is annex'd the Latin Particles, &c., (by Jenkin Tho. Philipps), 1726, 8vo. He also assisted his patron, the Earl (afterwards the Duke) of Newcastle, (see CAYDENISH, WILLIAM), in the composition of several plays published by his lordship, and wrote notes for John Ogilby's translations of Homer and Virgil. Of the nearly two-score plays to which the name of Shirley is attached, perhaps not half a dozen were familiar to the general reader before the appearance of Mr. Dyce's edition of his Works, nor has that publication much extended his circle of readers. Yet Wood (ubi supra) calls him "the most noted dramatic poet of his time," and Langbaine, twenty-five years after Shirley's death, prefixed the following, with other lines, to his catalogue of his plays:

"One of such incomparable parts that he was the Chief of the Second-rate Poets, and by some has been thought even equal to Fletcher himself. . . . I need not take pains to shew his Intimacy not only with the Poets of his time, but even the Value and Admiration that Persons of the first Rank had for him, since the Verses before several of his Works and his Epistles Dedicatory sufficiently shew it"—Dramatic Poets, 1661, 474, 475.

Charles Lamb concludes his Characters of Dramatic Writers contemporary with Shakespeare with the remark, "James Shirley claims a place amongst the worthies of this period, not so much for any transcendent talent in himself, as that he was the last of a great race, all of whom spoke nearly the same language and had a set of moral feelings and notions in common. A new language, and quite a new turn of tragic and comic interest, came in with the Restoration."—Works of Charles Lamb, ed. Boston, 1860, iv. 127.

Mr. Campbell speaks in a more decisive tone:

"Shirley was the last of our good old dramatists. When his works shall be given to the public, they will undoubtedly enrich our popular literature. His language sparkles with the most exquisite images. Keeping some occasional prudences apart, the fault of his age rather than of himself, he speaks the most polished and refined dialect of the stage; and even some of his over-heightened scenes of voluptuousness are meant, though with a very mistaken judgment, to inculcate morality. I consider his genius, indeed, as rather brilliant and elegant than strong or lofty. His tragedies are defective in fire, grandeur, and passion; and we must select his comedies, to have any favourable idea of his humour. His finest poetry comes forth in situations rather more familiar than tragedy and more grave than comedy, which I should call sentimental comedy, if the name were not associated with ideas of modern insipidity. That he was capable, however, of pure and excellent comedy will be felt by those who have yet in reserve the amusement of reading his Gamester, Hyde-park, and Lady of Pleasure. In the first and last of these there is a subtle ingenuity in producing comic effect and surprise, which might be termed Attic, if it did not surpass any thing that is left us in Athenian comedy. I shall leave to others the more special enumeration of his faults."—Specimens of English Poets, Lon., 1819, (q. v.)

"Shirley has no originality, no force in conceiving or delineating character, little of pathos, and less perhaps of wit; his dramas produce no deep impression in reading, and of course can leave none in the memory. But his mind was poetical; his better characters, especially females, express pure thoughts in pure language; he is never tumid or affected, and seldom obscure, the incidents succeed rapidly, the personages are numerous, and there is a general animation in the scenes which causes us to read him with some pleasure. No very good play, nor, possibly, any very good scene, could be found in Shirley; but he has many lines of considerable beauty. Among his comedies, the Gamesters may be reckoned the best. . . . The Ball, and also some more among the comedies of Shirley, are so far remarkable and worthy of being read, that they bear witness to a more polished elegance of manners, and a more free intercourse in the higher class, than we find in the comedies of the preceding reign. A queen from France, and that queen Henrietta Maria, was better fitted to give this tone than Anne of Denmark. But it is not from Shirley's pictures that we can draw the most favourable notions of the morals of that age."—HALLAM: Let Hist of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 120. See, also, 524.

"Most of his plays are tragedies, now sprightly and broadly humorous, now serious and solemn. The happiest efforts of his genius will perhaps be found in the tragic portions of these variegated dramas. They contain many a scene of elegant tenderness, of deep and quiet pathos, and express the feelings of honour, love, and friendship, in their highest fervour and refinement."—*REV. "This work has long been a standard book in its class. It was designed to complete the work of Prideaux, which ends where that of Shuckford begins. It is not, however, equal in talent or interest to Prideaux, and the reader will find it necessary to examine Dr. Shuckford's opinions with care; especially in his Disposition on the Creation and Fall of Man. Sibbald, James, D.D., Professor of Philosophy in the Marischal College at Aberdeen, appointed one of the ministers of Aberdeen, 1626-7; in 1638 was one of the Aberdeen doctors who disputed the Covenant with Alexander Henderson and David Dickson; was driven by the civil war to Dublin, where he died, after a ministry there of ten years. 1. Sibbald, James, b. 1747 or 1748, in Roxburghshire, Scotland; in 1779 repaired to Edinburgh, where he purchased the circulating library established by Allan Ramsay, and commenced bookseller. He died in 1803. In 1783 he established, and for several years edited and contributed to, The Edinburgh Magazine, in 1792 he conducted The Edinburgh Herald, in 1797 he edited The Vocal Magazine, and he was the author of the following works: 1. Record of the Public Ministry of Jesus Christ, Edin., 1798. 2. Chronicle of Scottish Poetry; from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a Glossary, 1802, 4 vols. 8vo.

"The Chronicle itself contains little that may not be found in the libraries of most antiquaries, but all such will, in future, be imperfect without this Glossary"—SIR WALTER SCOTT'S Edin. Rev., Oct. 1803, 193-210.

Sibbald, Sir Robert, M.D., an eminent naturalist and antiquary, b. in England, and educated at the University of Edinburgh and at Leyden, resided chiefly in Edinburgh, and d. about 1712. He was the author of a number of learned tracts, historical, biographical, and on various subjects of antiquities, natural history, &c., pub. 1661-1711, and contributed four papers to Phil. Trans., 1706, &c. We notice: 1. Scota Illustrata, sive Prodromus Historiæ Naturalis, Edin., 1684, fol., some l. p. The work noticed under PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, No. 5, is an attack upon this book, which is commended as "an admirable work" by Bishop Nicolson, (Scot. Hist. Lib.) Sibbald was employed more or less upon it during twenty years. 2. Phalaenologia Nova, 1692, 4to; Lon., 1773, 8vo. 3. Auctarium Musæi Balfouriani et Musæo Sibbalsiano, Edin., 1697, 12mo.

Sibbs, or Sibbes, Richard, D.D., b. at Sudbury, Suffolk, 1577; educated at, and Fellow of, St. John's College, Cambridge, on being ordained, was chosen Lecturer of Trinity Church, Cambridge, the living of which he held during the last two years of his life; Preacher of Gray's Inn, 1618; Master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, 1625, d. 1635. As a preacher he was famous, as a writer excellent, and it is a marvel that in this age of republication an edition of his works has not been given to the public,—especially as they have never been collected. There are, indeed, 3 vols. 8vo, (Lon., 1809; Aberdeen, 1812,) entitled Sibbs's Works; but the collection is incomplete, incorrectly printed, and contains neither the Prefaces, Dedications, nor Tables. Since the date of these volumes, Mr. Pickering has pub. several of his treatises, in 2 vols. 12mo, 1837-38, viz.: I. The Soul's Conflict, and Victory over itself by Faith: a Treatise of the Inward Disquietments of Distressed Spirits, with Comfortable Remedies to establish Them; II. The Bruised Reed and Smoking Flax; The Fountain Sealed; and a Description of Christ. A new ed. of his Divine Meditations was pub. 1838, 32mo.

Since the above was written there have been announced The Complete Works of Richard Sibbes, D.D.; Edited, with a Memoir, by Rev. A. B. Grosart, (Nichol's Stand. Div., Puritan Period,) Edin., 1862, 7 vols. 8vo.

"To my son Isaac I give Doctor Sibbes his Soul's Conflict, and to my daughter his Bruised Reed desiring them to read them so as to be well acquainted with them"—Isaac Walton's Will.

Richard Baxter tells us (Autobiography) that Sibbs's Bruised Reed was the cause of his conversion; which, says Granger, (Biog. Hist.,) is enough to make it memorable. Archbishop Usher, Dr. Doddridge, Thomas Fuller, Erasmus Middleton, Edward Leigh, Job Orton, Neal, Brook, (Lives of the Puritans,) Williams, (C. P., ed. 1843, 306,) Bickersteth, (C. S., ed. 1844, 245,) all unite before us at this moment in commendation of Sibbs; but we lack space for their testimonies. See, also, Clark's Lives, at the end of the Martyrology. His Commentaries upon Hosea, 1639, (also 1641,) 4to, and those upon II. Corinthians chap. i., 1655, fol., (also 1656, 4to,) are among the works (see others in Watt's Bibl. Brit. and in Darling's Cyc. Bibl., i. 2736-38) which are not in the collection of his Works, in 3 vols. 8vo, above referred to.

"Of this blest man let this just praise be given: Heaven was in him before he was in Heaven."

Sidney, or Sydney, Algernon, second surviving son of Robert, second Earl of Leicester of that creation, and of his wife, Dorothy, eldest daughter of Henry, Earl of Northumberland, and supposed to have been born in 1621 or 1622, after filling important public posts and distinguishing himself by his republican principles, was illegally convicted and executed for alleged complicity in the Rye-House Plot, Dec. 7, 1683. His attainder was reversed and his conviction condemned by the 7th Private Act of the first session of the first Parliament of William and Mary. Respecting his political life and character, which come not within the scope of our work, ample information will be found in the authorities subjoined. As an author he is known by Discourses concerning Government, Letters, and an Essay on Love. 1. Discourses concerning Government, pub. with a Preface by John Toland, Lon., 1698, fol.; 2d ed., 1704, fol.; 3d ed., 1751, fol.; 4th and 5th eds.: see HOLLIS, THOMAS, Nos. 2 and 3. "Sidney's Discourses on Government, not published till 1698, are a diffuse reply to Filmer. They contain indeed many chapters full of historical learning and judicious reflection; yet the constant anxiety to refute that which needs no refutation renders them a little tedious. Sidney does not condemn a limited monarchy like the English, but his partiality is for a form of republic which would be deemed too aristocratical for our popular theories"—HALLAM Lat. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 440.

"In all the Discourses of Algernon Sidney upon Government we see constant indications of a rooted dislike to monarchy and ardent love of democracy, but not a sentence can we find that shows the illustrious author to have regarded the manner in which the people were represented as of any importance."—LORD BROUGHAM Polit. Philos., Part 3, 2d ed., 1849, 88.

"They are admirably written, and contain great historical knowledge and a remarkable propriety of diction; so that his name, in my opinion, ought to be much higher established in the temple of literature than I have hitherto found it placed."

Mr. Hallam's estimate of the statesman is not so high:

"The whole of Sidney's conduct is inconsistent with his having possessed either practical good sense or a just appreciation of the public interests; and his influence over the whig party appears to have been entirely mischievous"—Ubi supra. See, also, 455-57.

Lord Macaulay is not disposed to question the honesty of Barillon's entry (see Dalrymple's Memoirs, 1773, 4to) which records a gift of 500 guineas to Mr. Sidney:

"It is impossible to see without pain such a name on the list of the pensioners of France, yet it is some consolation to reflect that, in our time, a public man would be thought lost to all sense of duty and of shame who should not spurn from him a temptation which conquered the virtue and the pride of Algernon Sidney"—Hist. of Eng., i. 1848, chap. ii. Sidney, Edwin, of St. John's College, Cambridge, (1821,) Rector of Cornard Parva, Suffolk, late Rural Dean of the Diocese of Norwich, and Chaplain to Viscount Hill, has been twice Select Preacher at Cambridge, and for ten years lectured annually at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. His pamphlets in advocacy of the Asylum for Idiots have greatly aided that excellent establishment; and the author enjoys a high popularity in East Anglia as a preacher and lecturer. 1. *Life of Rev. Sidney, or Sydney, Sir Henry, d. 1586, best known as the father of Sir Philip Sidney, would have been better known for his own merits had his son been less illustrious. He was the bosom friend of Edward VI., who expired in his arms, the favourite of Mary and of Elizabeth, Ambassador to France, for more than twenty years Lord President of Wales, and for eleven years Lord Deputy of Ireland; "learned in many languages, and a great lover of learning." He was a student of New College, Oxford, about 1543, according to Wood's surmise. The same authority (Athen. Oxon., vide Bliss's ed., i. 513) informs us that he left many MS. compositions, of which the writer had only seen the following: A Very Godly Letter, &c., unto Philip Sidney his Sonne then of tender yeeres at schoole in the towne of Shrewsbury with one M. Astone, 1591, sm. 8vo, pp. 16. See full title in Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 710: priced £25. It will be found, with some variations, in Letters and Memorials of State, written and collected by Sir Henry Sidney, Philip Sidney, and others; pub. by Arthur Collins, 1746, 2 vols. fol., some l. p. The Letter is also reprinted in the Harleian Miscellany, Blog. Brit., and Mrs. Davis's Life and Times of Sir P. Sidney. The ed. of 1591 contains A Postscript by my Lady Sidney, &c., which is not reprinted in Collins's Letters, &c., and an Epitaph of the Life and Death of the Lord President. The latter is in Cens. Lit.; the former in Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors. See A Godlie Sermon, &c. at the Buriall of Sir Henrie Sidney, Knight, by Thos. White, 1586, 16mo; Naunton's Frag. Sidney, Hon. Henry, M.P., afterwards Earl of Romney, a brother of Algernon Sidney, filled the offices of Secretary of State, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and other important public posts. See Diary of the Times of Charles the Second, by the Hon. Henry Sidney, afterwards Earl of Romney; including his Correspondence with the Countess of Sutherland, &c.; Edited, with Notes, by R. W. Blencowe, (q. v.) Lon., 1843, 2 vols. 8vo. Of little historical value, but should accompany Evelyn, Pepys, and Thoresby. For an account of Sidney, see Lord Macaulay's Hist. of Eng., Index.

Sidney, Mary, sister of Sir Philip Sidney, born probably about 1552, was married in 1576 to Henry, Earl of Pembroke, whom she survived twenty years, dying in 1621. The famous epitaph by which she is best known to the general reader is generally ascribed to Ben Jonson; but it is also claimed for William Browne, author of Britannia's Pastorals, and will be found in a MS. volume of his poems in the Lansdowne Collection, No. 777. In many modern copies six lines added by her son William, Earl of Pembroke, (see his poems,) are given us as part of the original epitaph,—which really runs thus:

"Underneath this sable hearse
Lies the subject of all verse —
Sidney's Sister! Pembroke's Mother!
Death, ere thou hast kill'd another,
Fair, and learn'd, and good as she,
Time shall throw his dart at thee!"

She acquired some reputation as a translator by the following: Antonius, a Tragedy, written in French by Ro. Garnier, with a Discourse of Life and Death, written in French by Ph. Mornay, both done into English by Mary Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, Lon., 1592, 4to. Rhodes, 1260, £8 12s. Also in 12mo. Antoine was republ. 1595, 12mo, (Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 544, £10 10s.) it is said in 4to also; and the Discourse, 1600, 16mo, and 1607, 12mo. See Gabriel Harvey's Letter of Notable Contents, 1593; Restituta, by Sir S. E. Brydges; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1845, ii. 135, 364; Lon. Reader, 1866, ii. 204. There has recently appeared: A Poem: On our Saviour's Passion; by Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke; from an Unpublished MS. in the British Museum; with a Preface by the Editor, 1862, cr. 8vo.

"She continually reminds us of that devotional singer of another communion, Father Southwell."—Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 461.

Park (Walpole's R. & N. Authors) supposes that Sir Philip Sidney assisted in the translation of the Discourse.

She was the author of An Elegy on Sir Philip Sidney, in Spenser's Astrophel, 1595; of A Pastoral Dialogue in Praise of Astræe, (Queen Elizabeth,) in Davison's Poetical Rhapsody, 1602; of The Countess of Pembroke's Passion, still in MS. in the British Museum; and is supposed to be co-author of the following, which remained in MS. until the date specified below: Psalms of David translated into Divers and Sundry Kindes of Verse by Sir Philip Sidney and the Countesse of Pembroke, with two Portraits, Chiswick, 1823, 12mo. 250 copies. Some of these had appeared in Sir John Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ, and the 137th, somewhat altered, in The Guardian, No. 18. Anthony Wood (Athen. Oxon.) and Sir R. Steele (Guardian, No. 18) ascribe this book of translations to Sir Philip Sidney solely; Sir J. Harrington (Nugæ Antiquæ, iii.) and Dr. Thomas (Account of the Bishops of Exeter) call it the joint composition of the Countess of Pembroke and her chaplain, Dr. Gervase Rabington, (vide p. 87, supra.) See, also, Holland's British Psalmists, i. 194, 197. Nor in enumerating this lady's services to the Republic of Letters should we omit to name her revision and improvement of her brother's Arcadia. Her praises were sung by Spenser in his Colin Clout's Come Home Again and his Ruins of Time, by Churchyard in his Pleasant Conceit, by Stradling in his Epigrammata; and the dedications of Fraunce, Daniel, and Morley are among the tributes to her merits. See Osborn's Memoirs; Ballard's Memoirs; Lodge's Portraits, Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors, Zouch's Memoirs of Sir P. Sidney; Drake's Shakspeare and his Times; Costello's Em. Englishwomen; Rowton's Female Poets, 15; Bethune's British Female Poets, 24; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1845, ii. 129-30, 234-59, 364-70, (Lady Mary Sidney and her Writings.)

Sidney, Sir Philip, November 29, 1554–October 17, 1586, the eldest son of Sir Henry Sidney, (supra), and his wife, Mary, daughter of the Duke of Northumberland, first opened his eyes at Penshurst Castle, the family seat, in the county of Kent, and—fortunately for the name which was thus redeemed from part of its well earned obloquy—was called Philip, in honour of the Spanish tyrant, then recently married to Mary of England.

Of his early days—as, indeed, of the whole of his brilliant career—we have a glowing eulogy from the biographer who coveted no higher title than that of THE FRIEND OF SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, (see GREVILLE, FULKE.)

"Of whose youth I will report no other wonder than this: That though I lived with him, and knew him from a child, yet I never knew him other than a man with such staleness of mind, lovely and familiar gravity, as carried grace, and reverence above greater years. His talk ever of knowledge, and his very play tending to enrich his mind, so as even his teachers found something in him to observe, and learn, above that which they had usually read, or taught. Which eminence by nature and industry made his worthy father stile Sir Philip in my hearing (though I unseen) Lumen famulæ sue."

At the age of twelve years, whilst at Shrewsbury School, he addressed to his father (then Lord President of Wales) the two epistles, one in Latin, the other in French, which elicited that Godly Letter of Sir Henry's, already noticed in our brief sketch of his life. In 1569 he was entered at Christ Church, Oxford, and, after there distinguishing himself, is said by Dr. Zouch (but not by Wood and his other earlier biographers) to have passed to Cambridge. But, according to the custom of his age and rank, his studies were to be continued abroad; and

"he had a licence from Queen Elizabeth, dated May 25, 1572, to go into parts beyond the seas, with three servants and four horses, and to remain the space of two years for his attaining the knowledge of foreign languages."—ARTHUR COLLINS Memoirs of the Sidneys, prefixed to Letters and Memorials of State, &c., 1746, i. 98.

He presented himself at Paris, duly furnished with a letter of introduction from his uncle the Earl of Leicester, to the English ambassador, Sir Francis Walsingham, and was safely lodged in the house of that sagacious statesman during the horrors of the St. Bartholomew massacre, August, 1572. Saddened by this appalling exhibition of human depravity, he continued his travels, visiting Belgium, Germany, (at Frankfurt securing the friendship of his learned correspondent Hubert Languet,) Hungary, and Italy. At Venice he devoted himself to horsemanship and other manly exercises. At Padua he appropriated eight months to Cicero, Plutarch, Petrarch, Boccaccio, Dante, and Ariosto.

In February, 1574, he returned to Venice; "and now," said, or thought, he, "I must see Rome also!"—a determination which his Protestant friend Languet, to Sidney's after-regret, successfully combated. At Venice he made the acquaintance of Edward, brother of Sir Henry Wotton, (the E. W. of his Defence of Poesie,) and it is asserted, (but this is a matter of doubt,) of the poet Tasso. In May, 1575, he returned to England, and, thus thoroughly furnished, and favoured by his near relationship to Leicester, it is no marvel that he soon became noted as a most successful courtier. He reached home in time to participate in the gorgeous festivities of Kenilworth, "pedantically" chronicled by the "coxcomb" Robert Laneham, (vide p. 1056, supra), and romantically pictured by the graphic pencil of Walter Scott. In 1576 he was sent by Queen Elizabeth to condole the death of the Emperor Maximilian II., and to congratulate his successor, Rodolph II., upon his new dignity. But, under the shadow of this compliment, he waited, at the same time, upon such of the German Princes as were interested in the defence and preservation of the Protestant religion or their own native liberties; and prevailed upon them to enter into a religious League with England.

On his arrival in England in the next year, the ability displayed in this mission called forth the warmest eulogies of Walsingham, who rejoiced the heart of Sir Henry Sidney by a letter announcing "the return of the young gentleman, your sonne, whose message verie sufficientlie performed, and the relating thereof, is no less gratefully received and well liked of Her Majestie, than the honourable opinion he hath left behinde him with all the princes with whom he had to negotiate, hath left a most sweet savoi and grateful remembrance of his name in those parts . . . There hath not been any gentleman, I am sure, these many yeres, that hath gone through so honourable a charge with as great commendacions as he"

Such a "sonne" was not to be rejected as a "sonne-in-law," and six years later (in 1583) the young diplomatist, crossed in love by the marriage of the Lady Penelope Devereux—the Philoclea of his Arcadia and the Stella of his poems—to Lord Rich, became the husband of Frances, the only daughter of Walsingham. This lady after his death became the wife of the Earl of Essex, Lady Rich's clan, and after his execution married the Earl of Clan-Ricard. But before his marriage Sidney had added to his eminent foreign successes on her Majesty's behalf a piece of domestic service of the most valuable kind,—the famous letter to the Queen dissuading her from the contemplated marriage with the Duke of Anjou, whose bold and romantic style of wooing at a later day (in 1581) threatened to overcome the personal defects of the swain and the political astuteness of the lady. Fortunately for England and England's Queen, the courtship proved unsuccessful; and to this result the logic and eloquence of Sidney's letter (see Strype's Annals of the Reformation and Hallam's Constit. Hist. of Eng.) not a little contributed.

This excellent epistle was written in 1579; and another fortunate event occurred in the next year,—the quarrel with the Earl of Oxford, which caused Sidney to retire in disgust from court and seek that repose at Wilton (the seat of his brother-in-law, the Earl of Pembroke) to which we are indebted for the romance consecrated to fraternal affection by the title of The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia. Commenced in 1580, this work was resumed from time to time, but left incomplete, on scattered leaves, at his death, six years later.

"One who writes himself G M [Gervase Markham] wrote the second and last part of the first book of the said Arcadia, making thereby a compleat end of the first history, Lond., 1613, qu. And in the eighth edit., printed at Lond., 1633, sir W. A., knight, [William Alexander, Earl of Stirling,] made a supplement of a defect in the third part of the history, and B. H., [see BELING, RICHARD,] of Linc. inn, esq., added then a sixth book therunto."—Wood Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 519

Park corrects Wood's error in a note, (q. v.); see, also, account of the editions of the Arcadia, infra. Sidney expressed a desire that the Arcadia should be destroyed. In 1581 Sir Philip represented the county of Kent in Parliament; in the same year he "was one of those noble gallants that performed, in the royal justings, barriers, and turney, for the entertainment of the Duke of Anjou," (as we have seen, again an unsuccessful suitor to the Virgin Queen,) and in this year also he found time from cares of state and revelry to devote many hours to his Defence of Poesie, which was circulated in manuscript several years before its appearance in print in 1595.

In 1583 he was knighted by his sovereign; in 1584 he wrote a Discourse in Defence of the Earl of Leicester, pub. in Collins's Sidney Letters, &c., 1746, 2 vols. 4to,) an answer to Robert Parsons's attack entitled Leicester's Commonwealth; and in 1586 he set his heart upon joining Sir Francis Drake's second expedition against the Spaniards in the West Indies. Would that this project had been consummated!—but another fate was in reserve for one from whose eminent abilities many years of usefulness were reasonably anticipated. The Queen straitly forbade the voyage to America; and it is asserted by several ancient chroniclers (e.g. Naunton's Frag. Regal. and Fuller's Worthies) that in this year her Majesty's fear of "losing the jewel of her times" alone prevented his being placed in nomination for the crown of Poland; but this romantic story does not appear to be well founded. In June, 1585, a treaty was concluded between Elisabeth and the Seven United Provinces, and Sir Philip Sidney was appointed, by the former, Governor of Flushing, one of the cautionary towns held as security for the English advances. His new duties, on which he entered November 18, 1585, were most efficiently discharged, but the history of his brief and well-managed government enters not into the plan of this work. He was fatally wounded at the memorable battle of Zutphen, September 22, 1586, was carried to Arnheim, and there died on the 17th October ensuing. The touching instance of self-sacrificing generosity to a wounded soldier is too well known to permit another repetition in this place. His body was conveyed to Flushing, where it remained eight days; reached the Tower wharf, London, on the 5th of November, and lay in state in the Minories until the 16th of February, when it was interred with great pomp in St. Paul's Cathedral. Thus lived and thus died the famous Philip Sidney! He "trod from his cradle to his grave amid incense and flowers, and died in a dream of glory," (Effigies Poeticæ) He left one child, Elizabeth, afterwards Countess of Rutland, who died without issue in 1613. The sensation produced throughout Europe by his death has perhaps never been equalled by the fall of any other uncrowned head. Among the tributes to his memory now displayed before us, as gathered from the past, are to be found those of kings and princes, noblemen and statesmen, soldiers and scholars. From these we would gladly quote, but, in default of space, must be content to refer the reader to authorities from which he can draw at his pleasure. Some opinions, however, on The Arcadia and The Defence of Poesie must not be omitted. The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia was first published Lond., 1590, 4to. The 2d edition, which was followed in the same volume by the author's Astrophel and Stella, and Sundry other Rare Sonnets of diuers Noblemen and Gentlemen, (these last—in all 108 sonnets and 11 songs—were all pub. together, in one volume 4to, in 1591,) and also Sonets, appeared in 1593, fol. All of the additions just enumerated are annexed also to all future editions of The Arcadia. The 3d issue was pub. 1598, fol., the 4th issue, called the 3d edition, appeared Edin., 1599, fol., the 5th issue, called the 4th edition, was pub. Lon., 1605, fol. The 6th issue, called the 4th edition,—which, in addition to the Arcadia, Five Books, The May Lady, Astrophel and Stella, &c., as above, contains also the Defence of Poesie,—was pub. 1613, fol. The 7th issue, called the 5th edition,—which includes A Supplement of a Defect in the Third Part of Sidney's Arcadia, by William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, (this Supplement appears to have been pub. separately also,)—appeared Dubl., 1621, fol. The Supplement appears in the subsequent editions also. The 8th issue, called the 6th edition, was pub. Lon., 1622, fol.; the 9th issue, 1623, fol.; the 10th issue, called the 6th edition, 1627, fol.; the 11th issue, called the 7th edition,—which contains an additional Supplement of a Defect in the Third Book, by Jas. Johnston, (q. v.), also in the subsequent editions, and a 6th Book of the Arcadia, by Richard Beling, (q. v.), both in one vol.,—1629, fol.; the 12th issue, called the 8th edition, 1633, fol., the 13th issue, called the 9th edition, 1638, fol., the 14th issue, 1647, fol.; the 15th issue, called the 10th edition, 1656, fol.; the 16th issue, called the 11th edition, 1662, fol.; the 17th issue, called the 12th edition, 1674, fol. Probably the issues of 1622 and 1623 are the same, and 1647 may be a misprint for 1674. The Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Knt., in Prose and Verse: The Fourteenth Edition, 1725, 3 vols. 8vo, new edition, Dubl., 1739, 3 vols. 12mo. In the edition of The Arcadia of 1662, fol., "are some things omitted in the 3 vols. of Works, 1725." The edition of 1725 contains: vol. i., Life, Criticisms on Pastoral Writing; The Arcadia, Books 1, 2; vol. ii., Arcadia, Books 3, 4, 5; vol. iii., Arcadia, Book 6, by R. B.; Poetical Works: Defence of Poesie; Astrophel and Stella, a Remedy for Love; Sonnets and Translations. The Lady of May; a Masque; Postscript. New edition of the Arcadia, with Notes, by the Author of "The Gentle life," (Hains Friswell,) Lon., 1867, p. 8vo, 7s. 6d.; 1. p., 15s.; Bost., Nov. 1867, cr. 8vo. What is called Sixth Book to Pembroke's Arcadia was pub. Dubl., 1624, 4to; A Continuation of Sir P. Sydney's Arcadia, Written by Mrs. A. W[ames], appeared Lon., 1651, 12mo, pp. 199; The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia, &c., Modernized by Mrs. Stanley, was pub. in 1725, fol. There have also been published versions of the Arcadia in Italian, French, Dutch, and other languages. See Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 8, 1863, 2395; Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1865.

Valour Anatomized in a Fancy, pub. 1581, 5vo, and at the end of Cotton's Posthuma, (see CORRON, SIR ROBERT BRUCE,) has been attributed by some to Sidney, by others to Sir Thomas Overbury. The Trewnesse of the Christian Religion, from the French of Philip of Mornay, translated by Sir Philip Sidney and Arthur Golding, (q. v.), was pub. in 1587, 4to, and reprinted in 1592; and Almanzor and Almansaida, a Novel, 1678, 12mo, was pub. in his name. There are two pieces ascribed to him in the Somers Collection. Respecting the version of the Psalms partially or wholly composed by him, see SIDNEY, MARY. See, also, PEARSE, STEWART ADOLPHUS, No. 1, (Sidney's Correspondence with Languet,) PORTER, MISS JANE, No. 2, (Sidney's Aphorisms.)

His Defence of Poesie, first pub. in 1595, 4to, (reprinted, edited by E. Arber, 1869,) and, as we have seen, repub. in the same volume with the Arcadia, was also pub. in Glasgow, 1752, 12mo, and again issued with Observations on Poetry and Eloquence from the Discoveries of Ben Jonson, all in 1 vol 8vo, very incorrectly printed, edited by Joseph Warton, in 1787. The Defence of Poesie was also privately printed by Lord Thurlow, (q. v.), 1810, sm. 4to; and an edition (reviewed by Longfellow the poet, in N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1832, 56-78) was pub. in Hilliard & Brown's Library of the Old English Prose Writers, (vol. 11,) Bost., 1831. It is also contained, together with Sidney's Sonnets, Masque, &c., and sixteen of his Letters, then first published, in The Miscellaneous Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Knt., with a Life of the Author and Illustrative Notes by William Gray, Esq., of Magdalen College and the Inner Temple, Oxford, 1829, p. 8vo, 1 p., r. 8vo, repub. Boston, (T O H P Burnham,) 1860, sq 8vo. This edition was reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., May, 1829, 70. Fifteen of Sidney's poems are contained in England's Helicon, (see last ed., 1812,) others will be found in England's Parnassus and Davison's Rhapsody; and an ode entitled Sir Philip Sidney Lying on his Deathbed, attributed to his pen, has recently been first published entire. see Edwards's Memoirs of Libraries, 1859, i. 669-72. In an old folio copy of the Arcadia, preserved at Wilton, was discovered, in 1857, a lock of Queen Elizabeth's hair, presented to Sidney in 1573, and an original poem, in the autograph of the latter, complimenting the donor. (See Lon. Athen., 1858, i. 21.) See, also, A Brief Account of an Unique Edition of Sir Philip Sydney's Arcadia, by J. O. Halliwell, 1856, 4to.

THE ARCADIA.

Fulke Greville is not disposed to admit that Sidney's pen conveys a fair impression of the author. Of the Arcadia he remarks,

"Those that knew him well will truly confess it to be, both in form and matter, much inferior to that unbought spirit of his, as the industry and images of other men's works are many times raised above the writers' capacities; and besides acknowledge that however he could not choose but give them aspersions of spirit and learning from the father, yet that they were scribbled rather as pamphlets for the entertainment of time and friends than an account of himself to the world; because, if his purpose had been to leave his memory in books, I am confident, in the right use of logic, philosophy, history, and poesy, nay, even in the most ingenious and mechanical arts, he would have showed such tracts of a searching and judicious spirit as the professors of every faculty would have striven no less for him than the seven cities did to have Homer of their sect, but the truth is, his end was not writing, even while he wrote, nor his knowledge moulded for tables and schools,—but both his wit and understanding bent upon his heart, to make himself and others, not in words or opinion, but in life and action, good and great"—Greville's Life of Sidney.

Gabriel Harvey rated the merits of the work much higher:

"Live ever, sweete, sweete booke: the simple image of his gentle wit, and the golden pillar of his noble courage; and ever notify unto the world that the writer was the secretary of eloquence, the breath of the muses, the honey-bee of the daintiest flowers of wit and art, the pith of morales and intellectual virtues, the arme of Bellona in the field, the tongue of Suda in the chamber, the sprite of Prætor in esse, and the paragon of excellency in print" (See Bibliotheca Hæseriana, Part First for a notice of a copy of the Arcadia with MS. notes by Hæsey.)

But these exalted panegyrics on the author and his book were insufficient to awe the skeptical Horace Walpole into a respect for the one or warm him into admiration of the other. On the contrary, he did not scruple to shock the lovers of both by such irreverence as this:

"No man seems to me so astonishing an object of temporary admiration as the celebrated friend of the Lord Brooke, the famous Sir Philip Sidney. The learned of Europe dedicated their works to him; the republic of Poland thought him at least worthy to be in the nomination for their crown. All the muses of England wept his death. When we, at this distance of time, inquire what prodigious merits excited such admiration, what do we find? Great valour.—But it was an age of heroes. In full of all other talents, we have a tedious, lamentable, pedantic, pastoral romance, which the patience of a young virgin in love cannot now wade through; and some absurd attempts to fetter English verse in Roman chains, a proof that this applauded author understood little of the genius of his own language. The few of his letters extant are poor matters, one to a steward of his father, an instance of unwarrantable violence. By far the best presumption of his abilities (to us who can judge only by what we see) is a pamphlet published among the Sidney papers, being an answer to the famous libel called Leicester's Commonwealth. It defends his uncle with great spirit. What has been said in derogation to their blood seems to have touched Sir Philip most. He died with the rashness of a volunteer, having lived to write with the sang-froid and prolixity of Mademoiselle Scuderi."—Royal and Noble Authors Lord Brooke.

See Park's ed. ii 222, and Park's note on this critique,—which was also attacked by a writer in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1767, 57; by Sir S. E. Brydges, in his ed of Phillips's Theat. Poet. Angl. ed. 1800, 139; by Hallam, in his Lit. Hist. of Europe; by Disraeli, in Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb 1809, (repub. in his Amements of Literature,) and by others. See Zouch's (ZOUCH, THOMAS, D D., No. 5) Memoirs of Sidney, 155. The critic of the magazine quotes a great authority in favour of the Arcadia.

"The true spirit and vein of ancient poetry in this kind seems to shine most in Sir Philip Sidney, whom I esteem both the greatest poet and the noblest genius of any that have left writings in our own or any other modern language"—SIR W. TEMPLE Essay on Poetry.

Walpole's dislike of the Arcadia was no greater than Hazlitt's:

"Sir Philip Sidney is a writer for whom I cannot acquire a taste. As Mr Burke said he 'could not love the French Republic'; so I may say that I cannot love 'the Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia,' with all my good will to it. It is to me one of the greatest monuments of the abuse of intellectual power upon record. It puts one in mind of the court dresses and preposterous fashions of the time, which are grown obsolete and disgusting. It is not romantic, but scholastic, not poetry, but casuistry; not nature, but art, and the worst sort of art, which thinks it can do better than nature. Of the number of fine things that are constantly passing through the author's mind, there is hardly one that he has not contrived to spoil, and to spoil purposely and maliciously, in order to aggrandize our idea of himself. Out of five hundred folio pages, there are hardly, I conceive, half a dozen sentences expressed simply and directly, with the sincere desire to convey the image implied, and without a systematic interpolation of the wit, learning, ingenuity, wisdom, and everlasting impertinence of the writer, so as to disguise the object, instead of displaying it in its true colours and real proportions"—Lect. on the Dramat. Art of the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VI, (q. v.)

But let us have something on the other side of the question:

"There are passages in this work exquisitely beautiful,—useful observations on life and manners, a variety and accurate discrimination of characters, fine sentiments, expressed in strong and adequate terms, animated descriptions, equal to any that occur in the ancient or modern poets, sage lessons of morality, and judicious reflections on government and policy. A reader who takes up the volume may be compared to a traveller who has a long and dreary road to pass. The objects that successively meet his eye may not in general be very pleasing, but occasionally he is charmed with a more beautiful prospect, with the verdure of a rich valley, with a meadow enamelled with flowers, with a murmur of rivulet, the swelling grove, the hanging rock, the splendid villa. These charming objects abundantly compensate for the joyless regions he has traversed. They fill him with delight, exhilarate his drooping spirits, and, at the decline of day, he reposes with complacency and satisfaction"—THOMAS ZOUCH, D D. Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Sir Philip Sidney, York, 1804, 4to.

"The Arcadia,' with all the imperfections that can be laid to its charge, is a rich mint of deep feeling and of varied excellence. It displays a fancy, it is true, which often runs riot amid the diversity of its creations, and a taste that sometimes erred from the infinite seductions to which it was exposed. But the work invariably makes atonement by the stately eloquence of its descriptions, and by the delicious incense which it offered up to the cause of virtue and true heroism"—WILLIAM GRAY Miscell. Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Oxf., 1829, p. 8vo and r. 8vo.

"The Arcadia' was not one of those spurious fictions invented at random, where an author has little personal concern in the narrative he forms. When we forget the singularity of the fable, and the masquerade dresses of the actors, we pronounce them to be real personages, and that the dramatic style distinctly conveys to us incidents which, however rambléd, had occurred to the poet's own observation, as we perceive that the scenes which he has painted with such precision must have been localities. The characters are minutely analyzed, and so correctly preserved, that their interior emotions are painted forth in their gestures as well as revealed in their language. The author was himself the tender lover whose amorous griefs he touched with such delicacy, and the undoubted child of chivalry he drew; and in these finer passions he seems only to have multiplied himself. . . . It is the imperishable diction, the language of Shakespeare, before Shakespeare wrote, which diffuses its enchantment over 'The Arcadia,' and it is for this that it should be studied, and the true critic of Sidney, because the critic was a true poet, offers his unquestioned testimony in Cowper,—

'SIDNEY, WARRIOR OF POETIC PROSE!'

ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit.

"Besides its excellent language, rare contrivances, and delectable stories, [it] hath in it all the strains of poetry, comprehending the universal art of speaking, and, to them who can discern and will observe, affordeth notable rules for demeanour both private and public."—PETER HEYLIN: Descrip. of Arcadia in Greece.

"The first good prose writer, in any positive sense of the word, is Sir Philip Sidney. . . . It does not appear to me that the Arcadia is more tiresome and uninteresting [the reference here is to Walpole's complaint, ut supra] than the generality of that class of long romances, proverbially among the most tiresome of all books; and in a less fastidious age it was read, no doubt, even as a story, with some delight. It displays a superior mind, rather complying with a temporary taste than affected by it, and many pleasing passages occur, especially in the tender and innocent loves of Pyrocles and Philoclea. I think it, nevertheless, on the whole, inferior in sense, style, and spirit to the Defence of Poesy. . . . Hakewill goes much too far in calling Sidney's Arcadia 'nothing inferior to the choicest piece among the ancients!'"—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, li 196, 217, iii. 337. See, also, 553

"There is no work, in short, in the department of prose fiction which contains more apothegmatic wisdom than the Arcadia of Sidney, and it is to be regretted that the volume which had charmed a Shakespeare, a Milton, [who does not let it escape without censure,] and a Waller, [see his verses on Sacharissa,] and which has been praised by Temple, by Heylin, and by Cowper, should be suffered, in any deference to the opinion of Lord Orford, to slumber on the shelf!"—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i 551, and see Index.

Dr. Drake expresses a very different opinion in his Essays illustrative of the Tatler, Spectator, &c., ii. 9. See, also, Sir Philip Sidney and the Arcadia, by J. Crossley, 1853, pp. 8vo, Collier's Bibl. Aoct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1865, Annual Rev., iv. 547, (by Robert Southey?) Retrospec. Rev., ii. 1820, 1-44, Mason's British Novelists, 1859, Lect. I.; the analysis of the Arcadia in Dunlap's History of Fiction, and the abstract of it in The Life and Times of Sir Philip Sidney, (by Mrs. S. M. Davis, of Syracuse, New York,) Bost., 1859, 16mo, (a book of great merit,) Lon. Athen., 1854, 7; Lon. Reader, 1865, u. 738, SHAKESPEARIANA, No. 792.

DEFENCE OF POESY.

"It belongs to the small number of those happy creations which he alone could either have produced or devised who has been touched and purified with the sacred fire of true genius. Originally designed as an answer to certain diatribes of the Puritans,—a sect which was then springing rapidly into notice, and beginning to signalize itself by an austere and fierce aversion to all the elegant recreations of society and of mind,—it remains an imperishable monument of the digested learning of its author, and of the engaging facility with which he could turn his talents to account. It has been aptly described in his own words as the 'sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge,' as the outpouring and register of those 'high-erected thoughts' which are solely to be found seated in their purity 'in a heart of courtesy.' At the same time, it contains few of those mannerisms and studied affectations of a day with which, it must be confessed, his larger work is often deformed. This is, on the contrary, a plain and practical treatise, seeking above all things to carry conviction by its illustrations and its arguments, and making fancy and ornament entirely subservient to the cause of persuasion and of truth. Yet the imaginative genius of the author frequently bursts forth in all its splendour, and strews his didactic path with a galaxy of the most brilliant conceptions. He seems here to follow religiously the memorable advice with which his muse favoured him on another occasion,—'Look in thy heart and write.'"—WILLIAM GRAY: Miscell. Works of Sir P. Sidney.

"This delightful piece of criticism exhibits the taste and erudition of Sir Philip in a striking light; the style is remarkable for amenity and simplicity; the laws of the Drama and Epopea are laid down with singular judgment and precision, and the cause of poetry is strenuously and successfully supported against the calumny and abuse of the puritanical schoolers, one of whom had the effrontery to dedicate to him his collection of scurrility, in the very title-page of which he classes poets with pipers and jesters, and terms them the 'caterpillars of the commonwealth.'" (See GOSSEN, STEPHEN, No. 1.)—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 467.

"Sidney, in this luminous criticism and effusion of poetic feeling, has introduced the principal precepts of Aristotle, touched by the fire and sentiments of Longinus, and, for the first time in English literature, has exhibited the beatitude of criticism in a poet-critic."—ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit.

"Sidney's Defence of Poesie, as has been surmised by his last editor, was probably written about 1581. I should incline to place it later than The Arcadia; and he may perhaps allude to himself where he says, 'some have mingled matters heroidal and pastoral.' This treatise is elegantly composed, with perhaps too artificial a construction of sentences; the sense is good, but the expression is very diffuse, which gives it too much the air of a declamation. The great praise of Sidney in this treatise is, that he has shown the capacity of the English language for spirit, variety, gracious idiom, and masculine firmness. It is worth notice that under the word possey he includes such works as his own Arcadia, or, in short, any fiction: 'It is not rhyming and versing that maketh poetry, one may be a poet without versing, and a versifier without poetry.' . . . The Defence of Poesy has already been reckoned among the polite writings of the Elizabethan age, to which class it rather belongs than to that of criticism; for Sidney rarely comes to any literary censure, and is still farther removed from any profound philosophy. His sense is good, but not ingenious, and the declamatory tone weakens its effect."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, li 197, 211. See, also, 124, 169, and Index.

"The Defence of Poetry is a work of rare merit. It is a golden little volume, which the scholar may lay beneath his pillow, as Chrysostom did the works of Aristophanes. We do not, however, mean to analyze it in this place; but recommend our readers to purchase this 'sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge.' It will be read with delight by all who have a taste for the true beauties of poetry, and may go far to remove the prejudices of those who have not."—HENRY W. LONGFELLOW: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1832, 56-78, (De France of Poetry)

Mr. Longfellow has presented a very successful "Defence of Poetry" in his own popular volumes. We have seen that Horace Walpole abused The Arcadia: he did worse by the Defence of Poesy:

"I have been blamed for not mentioning Sir Philip's Defence of Poetry, which some think his best work. I had indeed forgot it when I wrote this article, a proof that I at least did not think it sufficient foundation for so high a character as he acquired. This was all my criticism pretended to say, that I could not conceive how a man who in some respects had written dully and weakly, and who, at riot, was far inferior to our best authors, had obtained such immense reputation. Let his merits and his fame be weighed together, and then let it be determined whether the world has overvalued, or I undervalued, Sir Philip Sidney."—Note to 2d ed. of his R and N Authors, see Park's ed., li 222, n. See, also, Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, li 23, 302, li. 151.

See, also, W. A. Jones's Characters and Criticisms, ii. 61-69, Retrospec. Rev., x. 1824, 43-60, (and in Phila. Museum, xxxii. 343.) Hazlitt esteems Sidney's Sonnets as little as he does his Arcadia; but we must be content to refer to his Lectures on the Dramat. Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VI., not forgetting to prescribe as an antidote Charles Lamb's essay on some Sonnets of Sir Philip Sydney, (see Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Company's beautiful edition of Lamb's Works, Bost., 1860, 4 vols. 12mo.) in which, by the way, The Arcadia is also defended against Hazlitt. Dr. Drake's comments, also, on Sidney's Sonnets (in Shaksp. and his Times) must be pondered by the student. Sigourney, Lydia Huntley, formerly Miss Huntley, b. September 1, 1791, in Norwich, Connecticut, was "almost from infancy remarkable for a love of knowledge, and facility in its acquisition. She read with fluency when but three years of age; and at eight she wrote verses which attracted attention among the acquaintances of her family." At the age of nineteen, in company with an intimate friend, Miss Ann Maria Hyde, (vide No. 2, infra), she established a female school at Norwich, and two years later removed to Hartford, where she also engaged in the duties of instruction. In 1819 she was married to Mr. Charles Sigourney, of Hartford, where Mrs. Sigourney resided until her death, June 10, 1865.

"Mrs. Sigourney appears to have the power of writing extempore on passing events at the moment they are called for. But few persons, especially of poetic genius, have ever possessed this power. Those powers are twice valuable that can well accomplish their purpose on demand. Certainly as it regards poetic gifts, they who give promptly give twice."—MARIA EDGEWORTH, quoted in National Portrait-Gallery, iv. 7.

"The moral character of her writings is unexceptionable. She possesses great facility in versification, and is fluent both in thoughts and language. But much that she has written is deformed by the trifleness and irregularity consequent upon hasty composition, and hardly does justice to her real powers. 'Nigars,' 'The Death of an Infant,' 'Winter,' and 'Napoleon's Epitaph,' are favourable specimens of her talents."—EDWIN P. WHIPPLE. N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1844, 34.

"Mrs. Sigourney has been called by the affectionate admiration of her countrymen 'The American Hemans,' and she is rightly so called, inasmuch as she is the best of all their Poetesses."—Blackw. Mag., May, 1834, 807.

Prof. Silliman edited three editions—the last from 6th Lon. ed., Bost., 1814, 2 vols. 8vo.—of William Henry's Elements of Chemistry, and three editions—N. Haven, 8vo, 1829, 1833, 1839, (from 5th Lon. ed.)—of Robert Bakewell's Introduction to Geology. (See Lon. Philos. Mag., Oct. 1828.) The Treatise on The Philosophy of Geology, which was appended to the ed. of 1839, was pub. separately in London in 1839: see Lon. Athen., 1839, 946.

In 1818 he founded the American Journal of Science and Arts, (by which his name is so widely and honourably known,) already several times noticed in this volume, (BRUCE, ARCHIBALD, M.D., DANA, PROFESSOR JAMES DWIGHT; HITCHCOCK, EDWARD, D.D., LL.D., &c.) With the First Series (50 vols., 1818-45) he was particularly identified, but retained his interest in this invaluable thesaurus to the close of his life. The First Series was pub. quarterly; the New Series appears bi-monthly; and we presume that the demands of science will ere long convert it into a monthly. For notices of it we refer to N. Amer. Rev., xiii. (July, 1821) 247, (by Edward Everett); Everett's Orations and Speeches, iii. (1859) 430; Amer. Whig Rev., vi. 81; Blackw. Mag., xvii. 201, xviii. 590; Tidbner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Simeon of Durham, a monk of the monastery and preceptor of the cathedral of that place, and teacher of the sciences—especially of the mathematics—at the University of Oxford, is supposed to have died about 1130. His name is attached to Historia de Gestis Regum Anglorum, A.D. 616-1129, (a large part of which is copied from Florence of Worcester's Chronicle, itself a compilation), continued by John, Prior of Hexham, to 1156, and to Historia Dunelmensis Ecclesie, (really Turgot's History), already mentioned under BEDFORD, THOMAS, (some copies l. p.) Both of these works were pub. in Twysden's Historiæ Angliæ Scriptores Decem, Lon., 1652, 2 vols. fol.; and the Historia de Gestis Regum Anglorum ab A.D. DC.XVI. adusque A.D. DCCCC.VII., in vol. i., pp. 645-688, of Collection of Historians edited by order of the Record Commission. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 101-103, and authorities there cited.

Simeon, Charles, an excellent and useful divine, brother to the late Sir John Simeon, Master in Chancery, was b. at Reading, Sept. 24, 1759; educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow, ordained Deacon, 1782; presented to the living of Christ Church, Cambridge, 1783, and retained it until his death, Nov. 13, 1836. His first publication was Claude's Essay on the Composition of a Sermon; with an Appendix containing One Hundred Skeletons of Sermons, 1796, 8vo; which was followed by The Gospel Message; a Sermon, with Four Skeletons of Sermons, (intended as an appendix to his edition of Claude's Essay,) also 1796, 8vo. See ROBINSON, RICHARD, No. 4. He next pub. Helps to Composition; or, Six Hundred Skeletons of Sermons, 1801-2, 5 vols. 8vo, (some r. 8vo;) 2d ed., 1808; 3d ed., 1815. To this succeeded, from time to time, a number of sermons and pamphlets, and a new impression of Jenke's Prayers, &c., (see JENKS, BENJAMIN,) of which the 13th ed. (of Simeon's issue) was pub. 1859, 12mo. See, also, WALKER, SAMUEL, No. 2. His best-known work is the Horæ Homileticæ; or, Discourses (in the Form of Skeletons) upon the Whole Scriptures, 1819-20, 11 vols. 8vo, (some of the early vols bear date 1815 and 1818.) Appendix, 1828, 6 vols. 8vo. These volumes and the other publications (save a few controversial pamphlets) of the author are comprised in Simeon's Works: Horæ Homileticæ; or, Discourses, (principally in Form of Skeletons,) now first digested into one continued series, and forming a Commentary upon every Book of the Old and New Testament; with Claude's Essay, and Indexes; Edited by the Rev. "The works of Simeon, containing 2536 discourses on the principal passages of the Old and New Testament, will be found peculiarly adapted to assist the studies of the young clergy in their preparations for the pulpit, they will likewise serve as a Body of Divinity, and are by many recommended as a Biblical Commentary, well adapted to be read in families. . . Simms, William Gilmore, LL.D., one of the most voluminous and popular of American authors, was b. April 17, 1806, in Charleston, South Carolina, and admitted to the Bar of that State at the age of twenty-one. That love of letters, however, which had manifested itself from his boyhood soon rendered irksome the actions of a proverbially "jealous mistress;" and an editorial connection with the columns of the Charleston City Gazette was the commencement of a literary career of great activity and more than ordinary success. His remarkable versatility of talent will be best illustrated by a classified catalogue of the miscellaneous library which he has given to the public.

Mr. Simms is also editor of A Supplement to the Plays of William Shakespeare, comprising the Seven Dramas which have been ascribed to his pen, but which are not included in his Writings in Modern Editions; with Notes, and an Introduction to each Play, N. York, 1848, 8vo; and he is the author of a number of articles (Charleston, the lives of Senator Butler, Henry Laurens, John Laurens, and Hugh S. Legare, and perhaps other papers) in Appleton's American Cyclopædia. To this meagre list of productions should be added two courses of Lectures, of three each, On Poetry and the Practical, and The Moral Character of Hamlet; and the commencement of an elaborate autobiography. Of some of his works (of which we have generally given the dates of the first publication only) a number of editions have appeared; some have been republished in England; and several have been translated into French and German. To supply the home demand, a uniform edition of "Simms's Revolutionary and Border Romances of the South," (completed in 1859,) with illustrations by Darley, is published by J. S. Redfield, New York, in 18 vols. 12mo, viz.: I. The Partisan. II. Mellichampe. III. Katherine Walton. IV. The Scout. V. Woodcraft. VI. The Forayers. VII. Eutaw. VIII. Guy Rivers. XIX. and XX.—Simms's Poems, Dramatic, Contemplative, &c. Repub., (excluding XVIII.) Prose Works, 1865, 17 vols. 12mo, and Poems, 1864, 2 vols. 12mo. The large space occupied in the enumeration of the works of this author precludes the quotation of critical opinions; but to a number of these the reader has already been referred, and we extend the list by the addition of Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1855, 843; Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 80, 34, 40, 43, 503; Duyekineck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, ii. 427; Homes of American Authors, 1855, 257, (by William C. Bryant,) with a view of Woodlands, Mr. Simms' Country Residence, Barnwell District, South Carolina; Poe's Marginalia, clix. i.; Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., ed. 1859, lv.; Internat. Mag., April, 1852, 433; South. Lit. Rev., ix. 155, (Simms as a Political Writer.) Absorbed in the extent of Mr. Simms's literary engagements, we have forgotten to state that the boy designed for a doctor, admitted in maturer years as a lawyer, practising as a littérateur, and more recently as a planter, has also been a politician. He was for several years a prominent member of the South Carolina Legislature; and in December, 1846, escaped by only one vote the responsibilities of Lieutenant-Governor of his State. Mr. Simms's last publications were: 62 The Ghost of my Husband; a Tale of the Crescent City, N. York, 1866, 16mo. 63. War Poetry of the South; Edited, 1867, 12mo, pp. viii., 482. He has in preparation a School History of South Carolina; and is announced as one of the prospective contributors to Southern Society, a weekly, of which No. 1 is to be published at Baltimore, Oct. 1867.

Simson, Robert, 1687-1768, a native of Ayrshire, entered the University of Glasgow, 1701; was appointed Professor of Mathematics in that institution in 1711; taught five days in the week until 1758, when he began to employ aid, and in 1761 was instrumental in the appointment of his assistant and successor, the Rev. Dr. Williamson. His uncommon abilities, and especially his successful efforts towards the restoration of the works of the Greek geometers, gave him a distinguished rank among the teachers of his profession. 1. Sectionum Conicorum Libri V., Edin., 1735, 4to; 2d ed., 1750, 4to; some 1. p. "Perhaps the selection should have been carried further. This edition is correct and creditable to the compiler, and has obtained prodigious success. Sinclair, Miss Catherine, b. April 17, 1800, sixth daughter of the Rt. Hon. Sir John Sinclair, (infra), at the age of fourteen was duly appointed her father's amanuensis, and for many years devoted five to six hours daily to writing from his dictation. Fortunately for the reading public, she also handled the pen on her own account, and the following list of her works, to which others might be added, testifies to no ordinary amount of literary industry. She died Aug. 6, 1864. 1. Charles Seymour, 18mo, last ed., 1861. 2. Anecdotes of the Cæsars, 18mo, last ed., 1861. 3. Modern Accomplishments, 1835, p. 8vo, last ed., 1866, fp. 8vo. See No. 4. Of Nos. 3, 4, 6, 9, 11, 16, and 18, and perhaps of some of the others, the sale in Great Britain and America has been large. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 16, 18, 21, and 23 form the 12 vols., fp. 8vo, April, 1860—March, 1861, of The Cheap Library, (London Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ipswich J. M. Burton & Co.) Of some of Miss Sinclair's books we have more commendatory notices before us than we have room to quote or even time to count. This excellent lady for some years before her death was engaged in "the superintendence of a charitable institution for the widows of officers of the army; a charge which was bequeathed her, together with a large income, by a lady whose partiality originated solely in a knowledge of her writings, although it was subsequently matured by personal intercourse." She was also active in other good works.

"Miss Sinclair is already so popular, so justly a favourite, that the characteristics of her style are thoroughly known. The present work has in undiminished strength the sparkling vivacity of dialogue, the unfeeling wit, and useful tendency which mark its predecessors."—Dubl. Univ. Mag. notice of Modern Flirtations

Skelton, John, b. about 1460; appears to have been connected with both Oxford and Cambridge; was ordained deacon in 1498, and priest in 1499; became tutor to the Duke of York, afterwards Henry VIII.; in 1504 was Rector of Diss, Norfolk, and Curate of Trompington, Cambridgeshire, incurred the resentment of Wolsey by his satirical poem, Why Come Ye Not to Courts? and to avoid arrest took sanctuary at Westminster, where he d., June 21, 1529. His reputation as a satirical rhymester was at least equalled by his fame as a classical scholar,—Erasmus rather extravagantly styling him "Britannicarum Literarum Decus et Iumen," (Epist. to Hen. VIII., prefixed to his Epigrams, 294, Basil, 1518, 4to.) Among his works are: 1. The Nigramanser, Lon., 1504, 4to.

"Ritson (Bibl. Port.) doubted the existence of such a book; but I have so frequently seen and handled volumes mentioned by Warton [Hist. of Eng. Poet.] and denied to exist by Ritson, [*Bibl. An edition of less value was pub. 1736, 12mo, (and Skelton's Poems will be found in Chalmers's British Poets, vol. ii.) but the only good edition, which includes many hitherto unpublished, now first collected, was published, with Notes and some Account of the Author and his Writings, by Rev Alexander Dyce, in 1843, 2 vols. 8vo; 25 copies on thick paper, with alterations, &c., Bost., 1856, 3 vols. 16mo. "By the Rev Alexander Dyce, who has performed his difficult task in a manner to leave little or nothing further to be desired"—G. L. CRAIK, LL.D. Comp. Hist. of Eng. Lit., 1863.

The vigour of this poet is well expressed in Bishop Hall's line—

"Angry Skelton's breathlesse rhymes"—(Virgidemiarum, lib. iv.)

his coarseness is rebuked by Pope in the familiar couplet,
"Chaucer's worst ribaldry is learned by rote,
And beauly Skelton Heads of Houses quote"

Imit. of Horace, B II, Epist. I;

and to Cleland he declared,
"Skelton's poems are all low and bad; there's nothing in them that's worth reading"—Spence's Anec., sect. iv. 1734–36.

We give some other opinions:

"Being indeed but a rude raying rimer, and all his doings ridiculous, he used both short distances and short measures, pleasing only the popular eare"—PURTEMAN. Arte of Eng. Poet., lib. ii. ch. ix. 69, 1589.

"Skelton applied his wit to skurrilities and ridiculous matters: such among the Greeks were called pantomims, with us buffoons"—MERRIS Palladis Tuma, 1698.

"Methinks he hath a miserable loose rambling style."—EDWARD PHILLIPS. Theat. Poet. Anglic., 1675.

"Tho' his stile is rambling and loose, yet he was not without invention, and his satire is strongly pointed"—CIBBER. Lives of the Poets, i. 27, 1753.

"It is in vain to apologise for the coarseness, obscenity, and scurrility of Skelton by saying that his poetry is tinged with the manners of his age. Skelton would have been a writer without decorum at any period. . . . Skelton's characteristic vein of humour is capricious and grotesque. If his whimsical extravagancies ever move our laughter, at the same time they shock our sensibility. His festive levities are not only vulgar and indelicate, but frequently want truth and propriety. His subjects are often as ridiculous as his metre, but he sometimes debases his matter by his versification. On the whole, his genius seems better suited to low burlesque than to liberal and manly satire. It is supposed by Caxton [Preface to Enchid.] that he improved our language; but he sometimes affects obscurity, and sometimes adopts the most familiar phraseology of the commen people."—WARTON: Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed 1840, II. 494. And see Index, and Warton's Spenser, II. 107.

"There is certainly a vehemence and vivacity in Skelton which was worthy of being guided by a better taste; and the objects of his satire bespeak some degree of public spirit. But his eccentricity in attempts at humour is at once vulgar and flippancy, and his style is almost a texture of slang phrases, patched with shreds of French and Latin"—CAMPELL: Specimens of Eng. Poet., I. 101-8.

"Skelton is certainly not a poet, unless some degree of comic humour, and a torrent-like volubility of words in doggerel rhyme, can make one, but this uncommon fertility, in a language so little copious as ours was at this time, bespeaks a mind of some original vigour. Few English writers come nearer in this respect to Rabelais, whom Skelton preceded. His attempts in serious poetry are utterly contemptible, but the satirical lines on Cardinal Wolsey were probably not ineffective. It is impossible to determine whether they were written before 1520. Though these are better known than any poem of Skelton's, his dirge on Philip Sparrow is the most comic and imaginative."—HALLAM Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, I. 313. See, also, 423, 438.

"The power, the strangeness, the volubility of his language, the audacity of his satire, and the perfect originality of his manner, made Skelton one of the most extraordinary writers of any age or country"—SOUTHER.

"This singular writer has suffered the mischance of being too original for some of his critics. They looked on the surface, and did not always suspect the depths they glided over. The legitimate taste of others has revolted against the mixture of the ludicrous and the invective."—ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit. Skelton, (q. v.)

"With strong sense, a vein of humour, and some imagination, he had a wonderful command of the English language. His rhymes are interminable, and often spun out beyond the sense, in the wantonness of power. In judging of this old poet, we must always recollect the state of poetry in his time, and the taste of the age, which being taken into the account, we cannot help considering Skelton as an ornament of his own time, and a benefactor to those which came after him"—RETROSPEC. REV., VI. 1822, 337-53, (q. v.)

"Rutebeuf reads to me like our Skelton: he has the same flowing rapid doggerel, the same satiric verse, with not much of poetry, but both are always alive"—H. H. MILMAN: Hist. of Lit. Chrs., vol. VI. b. xi. ch. li., n.

His sermons are warmly commended by John Wesley and others, and also by Clapham in sufficiently exalted strains:

"In his reasoning he is as clear as Sherlock, in his warnings as solemn as St. Ker, in his piety as engaging as Porteus, and in his exhortations as vehement as Demosthenes."

Skinner, Stephen, M.D., b. in London, 1623, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, after pursuing his studies on the Continent, settled at Lincoln, where he cultivated medicine and philology with great success until his death, in 1667. He had long been engaged in the preparation of an etymological dictionary of the English language, and left MSS. on the subject, thus catalogued by Wood: 1. Prolegomena Etymologica, with a large preface. 2. Etymologicon Linguae Anglicanae. 3. Etym. Botanicum. 4. Etymological Expositio Vocum Forensium. 5. Etymol. Vocum Omnium Anglicarum. 6. Etym. Onomasticum, &c. The author of the Preface to the reprint of Johnson's Dictionary Verbatim from the Author's Last Folio Edition, Lon., 1828 et seq., (vide JOHNSON, SAMUEL, LL.D., p. 975, supra), alleges that Tooke, in his Divisions of Purley, treats Skinner—to whom he is largely indebted—with great unfairness. Smith, Adam, LL.D., the only child of Adam Smith, Comptroller of the Customs at Kirkcaldy, Scotland, and of his wife, Margaret Douglas, daughter of Mr. Douglas of Stratherny, was b. at Kirkcaldy, June 5, 1723, (a few months after the death of his father,) studied at the University of Glasgow, 1737-40, and at Balliol College, Oxford, (as an exhibitor on Snell's foundation,) 1740-47, read lectures on rhetoric and belles-lettres at Edinburgh, under the patronage of Lord Kames, 1748-51, Professor of Logic in the University of Glasgow, 1751-52, and Professor of Moral Philosophy, 1752-63, travelled on the Continent with the Duke of Buccleuch, March, 1764-October, 1766; lived in retirement at Kirkcaldy, engaged on his Wealth of Nations, 1766-76, resided chiefly in London, 1774-78, appointed one of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Customs in Scotland in 1778, and thereupon removed to Edinburgh, where he resided until his death, July, 1790. In 1787 he was elected Rector of the University of Glasgow; and "no preference," he declares, (in his letter of acceptance to the Principal,) "could have given" him "so much real satisfaction."

He was never married; though—but this interesting part of his history shall be told in the language of his friend and biographer, Dugald Stewart:

"In the early part of Mr Smith's life, it is well known to his friends that he was for several years attached to a young lady of great beauty and accomplishment. How far his addresses were favourably received, or what the circumstances were which prevented their union, I have not been able to learn, but I believe it is pretty certain that after this disappointment he laid aside all thoughts of marriage. The lady to whom I allude died also unmarried. She survived Dr Smith for a considerable number of years, and was alive long after the publication [1795] of the first edition of this Memoir. I had the pleasure of seeing her when she was turned eighty; and she still retained evident traces of her former beauty. The powers of her understanding and the gaiety of her temper seemed to have suffered nothing from the hand of time."—Account of the Life and Writings of Adam Smith, LL.D.

He enjoyed all the comforts of home in the society of his mother, who died in 1784, and of his cousin, Miss Douglas, who followed her in 1788: the loss of their companionship was severely felt, and is supposed to have hastened his own end. His moral character was not only irreproachable, but his benevolence, candour, and gentleness were conspicuous, and no man seems to have been more esteemed and beloved by his friends. Among the most intimate of these was David Hume; and in Smith's Letter to Mr. Strahan on the last illness of David Hume, London, 1777, 8vo, and prefixed to the autoble graphy of the latter, (see HUME, DAVID, p. 914.) evidence was afforded that in the religious opinions of these philosophers there were few points of difference. As Smith had pursued his early studies at Oxford, with a view to the ministry of the Church of England, the skepticism exhibited in this publication excited no little surprise. He was attacked with considerable wit by Bishop Horne, through the medium of an anonymous pamphlet, entitled A Letter to Adam Smith, LL.D., on the Life, Death, and Philosophy of David Hume, Esq.; by one of the People called Christians, Oxford, 1777, 12mo. Dr Smith's first publication, a critique on Dr Johnson's Dictionary, in the (old) Edinburgh Review, 1755, has been already noticed by us, (JOHNSON, SAMUEL, p. 976.) Sir James Mackintosh, it will be observed, (see, also, Mackintosh's Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 467,) does not rate its lexicographical value very high—Lord Brougham, however, (Life of Adam Smith), calls it "a paper of great merit." Dr Smith also published in this Review, A Letter to the Editors. We proceed to an enumeration, accompanied with critical notices, of Dr. Smith's subsequent publications.

To the second (1761, 8vo) and all following editions was appended A Dissertation on the Origin of Languages, and on the Different Genius of those which are Original and Compounded. The 6th edition, with Considerable Additions and Corrections, was pub. 1790, 2 vols. 8vo; 7th ed., 1792, 2 vols. 8vo; 8th ed., 1797, 2 vols. 8vo; 9th ed., 1801, 2 vols. 8vo, 10th ed., 1804, 2 vols. 8vo; 11th ed., Edin., 1808, (some 1809), 2 vols. 8vo; and an edition in 1812, in 1 vol. 8vo. It was repub., Boston, 1817, 8vo; N. York, 1821, (some 1822,) 2 vols. in 1, 8vo. The last edits. in English are those of Griffin, Edin., 1849, '54, p. 8vo, H. G. Bohn, (Stand. Lib., &c.), Lon., 1853, p. 8vo; the last edit., in French, (traduction de Mme. la Marquise de Condorcet,) revue, annotée et précédée d'une Introduction par M. H. Baudrillard, Paris, 1860, 12mo.

The doctrine of this work is thus summed up by the author:

"When we approve of any character or action, the sentiments which we feel are derived from four different sources. First, we sympathize with the motives of the agent, secondly, we enter into the gratitude of those who receive the benefits of his actions, thirdly, we observe that his conduct has been agreeable to the general rules by which those two sympathies generally act, and, lastly, when we consider such actions as making part of a system of behaviour which tends to promote the happiness either of the individual or of society, they appear to derive a beauty from this utility not unlike that which we ascribe to any well-contrived machine."

The sources of moral approbation he believes to be here all enumerated:

"After deducting," he remarks, "in any particular case, all that must be acknowledged to proceed from some one or other of these four principles, I should be glad to know what remains; and I shall freely allow this overplus to be ascribed to a moral sense, or to any other peculiar faculty, provided anybody will ascertain what this overplus is."

The philosopher's theory is now so generally condemned as unsound that, upon reflection, we have concluded it to be useless to occupy our limited space with the expositions of eminent critics which lie at our elbow. It will be quite sufficient to refer the student of mental philosophy to Dr. Brown's Lectures (Lect. XIII.) on the Philosophy of the Human Mind, Sir J. Mackintosh's Prelim. Dissert. on the Progress of Ethical Philosophy, prefixed to Encyc. Brit., (repub. in his Miscell. Works, vol. i.); Morell's Hist. of Mod. Philos.; Stewart's Account of Smith; Lord Brougham's Life of Smith, (Lives of Philosophers Time George III.); C. S. Henry's Epit. of the Hist. of Philos.; Blakey's Hist. of Philos. of Mind; Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., (Lect. IX.) Hoffman's Legal Outlines; Memoirs of T. Moore; Sir Wm. Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, (Lects. XXXV., XXXVI.,) 1859; An Essay in Vindication of the Colonies of America from Adam Smith, 1764, 8vo; Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859; *Blackw. But, though Dr. Smith's philosophy be unsatisfactory, in his treatment of it he is most agreeable and often peculiarly happy. Professor Smyth considers his work the most delightful of all philosophical books; Dr. Brown styles its "minor details and illustrations" "a model of philosophic beauty;" Lord Brougham calls it

"a performance of the highest merit;" and Sir James Mackintosh, whilst finding fault with its "redundancy" and "repetitions," commends its "beauty of diction." The last-named critic also gives Dr. Smith the credit of being "the first who has drawn the attention of philosophers to one of the most curious and important parts of human nature—who has looked closely and steadily into the workings of Sympathy."

"The 'Wealth of Nations' gives Adam Smith an undoubted claim to be regarded as the founder of the modern system of political economy, and to be classed amongst the most eminent benefactors of his species. The excellence of this great work is obvious from the fact of its having exercised a more powerful and beneficial influence over the public opinion and legislation of the civilized world, since its appearance, than has ever been exercised by any other publication. It owes this high distinction to a variety of causes, but principally, perhaps, to the general soundness and liberality of its general doctrines, to their bearing upon the most important affairs and interests of nations and individuals, and to the admirable manner in which they are expounded. Nor is it the least of the author's merits that he has pointed out and smoothed the route by following which subsequent philosophers have been able to perfect much that he left incomplete, to rectify the mistakes into which he sometimes fell, and to make many new and important discoveries."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1846, li. See, also, McCulloch's Principles of Political Economy, RICARDO, DAVID, No. 6.

"The great name of Adam Smith rests upon the Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, perhaps the only book which produced an immediate, general, and irrevocable change in some of the most important parts of the legislation of all civilized states. The works of Grotius, of Locke, and of Montesquieu, which bear a resemblance to it in character and had no inconsiderable analogy to it in the extent of their popular influence, were productive only of a general amelioration,—not so conspicuous in particular instances as discoverable, after a time, in the improved condition of human affairs. The work of Smith, as it touched those matters which may be numbered and weighed, bore more visible and palpable fruit. In a few years it began to alter laws and treaties; and has made its way through the convulsions of revolution and conquest to a due ascendancy over the minds of men, with far less than the average of those obstructions of prejudice and clamour which ordinarily choke the channel through which truth flows into practice. The most eminent of those who have since cultivated and improved the science will be the foremost to address their immortal master.

"Tenebris tantis tam clarum extollere lumen

Qui primus potuit, INLUSTRANS COMMODA VITÆ

Te sequor!" (Lucret., lib. iii.)"

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Dissert. on the Progress of Ethical Philos. See, also, his Life of Sir T. More, Works, i. 421, and his articles in Edin. Rev., xx. 347, xxvii. 191.

"The 'Wealth of Nations' combines both the sound and enlightened views which had distinguished the detached pieces of the French and Italian Economists, and, above all, of Mr. Hume, with the great merit of embracing the whole subject, thus bringing the general scope of the principles into view, illustrating all the points of the inquiry by their combined relations, and confirming their soundness in each instance by their application to the others. The copiousness of the illustrations keeps pace with the closeness of the reasoning; and wherever the received prejudices of lawyers are to be overcome, or popular errors to be encountered, the arguments and the facts and the explanations are judiciously given with extraordinary fulness; the author wisely disregarding all imputations of prolixity or repetition, in pursuit of the great end of making himself understood and gaining the victory over error. The chapter on the Mercantile System is an example of this, but the errors of that widely-prevailing theory and its deeply-rooted prejudices are also encountered occasionally in almost every other part of the work. It is a lesser, but a very important, merit, that the style of the writing is truly admirable. There is not a book of better English to be anywhere found. The language is simple, clear, often homely like the illustrations, not seldom idiomatic, always perfectly adapted to the subject handled. Besides its other perfections, it is one of the most entertaining of books. There is no laying it down after you begin to read. You are drawn on from page to page by the strong current of the arguments, the manly sense of the remarks, the fulness and force of the illustrations, the thickly-strewn and happily-selected facts. Nor can it ever escape observation that the facts, far from being a mere bed-roll of details unconnected with principle and with each other, derive all their interest from forming parts of a whole, and reflecting the general views which they are intended to exemplify or to support."—LORD BROUGHAM Lives of Philos. Time of Geo. III., ed. 1855, 263-64. See, also, 408-72, his Men of Letters, ed. 1855, 241, n., his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, iii. 3-20, and his Polit. Philos., Pt. 1, Introduction.

"The great and leading object of his speculations is, to illustrate the provisions made by nature in the principles of the human mind, and in the circumstances of man's external situation, for a gradual and progressive augmentation in the means of national wealth, and to demonstrate that the most effectual plan for advancing a people to greatness, is to maintain that order of things which nature has pointed out, by allowing every man, as long as he observes the rules of justice, to pursue his own interest in his own way, and to bring both his industry and his capital into the freest competition with those of his fellow-citizens. Every system of policy which endeavours, either by extraordinary encouragements to draw towards a particular species of industry a greater share of the capital of the society than what would naturally go to it, or by extraordinary restraints to force from a particular species of industry some share of the capital which would otherwise be employed in it, is, in reality, subversive of the great purpose which it means to promote."—DUGALD STEWART Account of the Life and Writings of Adam Smith, LL.D.

"Few, I believe, have studied Mr. Smith's works, (particularly his 'Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations,') without regretting, on some occasions, the omissions of his authorities, and, on others, the digressions into which he has been led by conforming so scrupulously to the example of antiquity."—DUGALD STEWART Account of the Life and Writings of Dr. William Robertson.

Other defects besides the omission of authorities have been complained of:

"The great defect of Adam Smith, and of our economists in general, is the want of definitions."—ARCHBISHOP WHATELY Elements of Logic.

"It is only a promiscuous assemblage of the soundest principles of political economy, supported by the clearest illustrations and ingenious statistical speculations, blended with instructive reflections, it is not a complete treatise on either science, but an ill-digested mass of enlightened views and accurate information."—J. B. SAY Polit. Econ.

Yet Professor Smyth thinks that studious application only is necessary to a sufficient comprehension of the work.

"The great work of Adam Smith is not an elementary book,—very far from it; and your best chance of understanding it is to read of each chapter as much as you can, then go to the next chapter, and so on; and, when you have got to the end of the book, begin the book again, and you will at length comprehend the whole sufficiently for any general purpose. I have lately seen a treatise by Mr. Boileau, which I hoped I might recommend to you on this occasion; but I do not think it will be found either more simple or more intelligible than Adam Smith's original work, from which it is avowedly borrowed."—LECTS. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XXX. See, also, Lects. III. and XXVI., and his Lects. on the French Revolution.

For an elementary book, Professor Smyth recommends the Conversations on Political Economy: see MARSH, MRS. JANE, No. 3.

"It is not less agreeable in form than it is valuable in substance; and, instead of being—as is supposed by some—who have not read it—dry and repulsive, is undoubtedly, to every reader of mature taste and liberal accomplishments, one of the most interesting as well as instructive books which he can take up."—ALEXANDER H. EVRETT N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1831, 216. See, also, 218, 222, 223, 225, 229, 231, 232.

"The great text-book of political economy, The Wealth of Nations. In every page of that book its readers found themselves pre-empted with the evidence of the superior advantages of commerce over trade, and of the absolute necessity of commerce at home if they would have it abroad. . . . In every page of that great work they found evidence that if they would prosper they could do so on one condition only,—that condition which requires that the consumer and the producer take their places by each other's side, and thus approximate as nearly as possible the prices of raw materials and manufactured commodities. . . .

Dr. Smith was not always right, but he was very generally so. Modern political economy, as has before been said, has very generally rejected him when he was right, or has so used him as to cause him to stand responsible for the correctness of views that, had he been alive, he would indignantly have denounced as utterly erroneous."—HENRY C. CAREY, Principles of Social Science, ii. 1858, 108, 109, 127, n., and see Index, vol. ii.

"When Adam Smith first stated the truth that one nation does not gain by the poverty of another, but that all are gainers by the prosperity of all, no one suspected that a sagacious despot of great power [Napoleon III.] would on this very year pronounce the great truth on his imperial throne to the assembled deputies of his nation."—DR. From some modern statesmen and publicists Adam Smith and his department of political sciences have met with little respect. Charles James Fox, remarks Mr. Rogers, "Treated Political Economy lightly. Said France had drawn her political knowledge from England. 'We knew nothing on that subject till Adam Smith wrote,' said Lord Lauderdale. 'Poh,' says Fox, 'your Adam Smiths are nothing. But that is his Love,' says Fox, speaking of Lauderdale, 'we must spare him there.' 'I think,' says Lauderdale, 'it is every thing.' 'That,' says Fox, 'is a great proof of your affection.'"—Recollec. by Saml. Rogers, (Charles James Fox,) 1859, 14.

This conversation occurred in 1796—it was eight years after this when his lordship published his work on Public Wealth, (see LAUDERDALE, p. 1064, supra.) John Horne Tooke, Mr. Rogers tells us, when commending Hume's style, ranked "his pupil Smith far, very far, below him—his Theory of Moral Sentiments nonsense,—his Wealth of Nations full of important facts, but written with a wicked spirit."—Ibid. supra, 136.

"It is not the habit of my mind to despise nor to undervalue the sort of knowledge which I do not possess, but I know enough of political economy to have perceived in the father of the British school (Adam Smith) that the wealth of nations is every thing in that school, and the morality and happiness of nations nothing, and in the other writers which have fallen in my way, I have found their knowledge so little, and their presumption so great, as to excite in me a greater degree of contempt than I usually feel for any thing in the shape of a book."—ROBERT SOUTHBY Letter to Henry Taylor, April 12, 1827. Life and Correspondence of R. Southby, ch. xxx.

"Adam Smith contributed more, by the publication of this single work, toward the happiness of man, than has been effected by the united abilities of all the statesmen and legislators of whom history has preserved an authentic account."—BUCKLE Hist. of Civil. in Eng., 1857-61, 2 vols. 8vo.

"For my part, though I like the investigation of particular questions, I give up what is called the 'science of political economy.' There is no such science. There are no rules on those subjects so fixed and invariable as that their aggregate constitutes a science. I believe I have recently ran over twenty volumes, from Adam Smith to Professor Dew, of Virginia, and from the whole, if I were to pick out with one hand all the mere truisms, and with the other all the doubtful propositions, little would be left."—DAVID WEBSTER Letter to Mr. Dutton, May 9, 1830. Private Correspondence of D. Webster, 1857, i. 501.

Stewart's Account of Smith (on which see criticisms in Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 32, and *Lon. Gent. (1858) of the Collected Works of Dugald Stewart, Esq., F.R.S., &c.; edited by Sir William Hamilton, Bart, &c. &c., Edin. and Lon., (see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, i. 407.) But we must not omit to refer to the graphic sketch of Smith in the Autobiography of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Carlyle, Edin., 1860, 8vo, and Bost., 1861, 12mo. Among the intended works of Smith never completed was a large Treatise on Law and Government, originally announced in the preface to the first edition (1759) of his Theory of Moral Sentiments, and still promised in a late edition of that work:

"Thirty years ago," he remarks, "I entertained no doubt of being able to execute every thing which it announced."

What an affecting record would that be which should chronicle The Uncompleted Projects of Great Minds! (See BAKER, THOMAS; COLE, WILLIAM.)

But Smith accomplished much; and, however indifferent our reader may be to his political or his moral philosophy, he will find enough in the literary treatment of these themes to reward him for a careful perusal of The Wealth of Nations, The Theory of Moral Sentiments, and the Philosophical Essays.

"Adam Smith was nearly the first who made deeper reasonings and more exact knowledge popular among us."—LORD JEFFREY Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 77, (quotation continued on p. 977, supra, of this Dictionary. DR. JOHNSON'S STYLE OF COMPOSITION.)

"Among the inferior excellencies of this great philosopher, it is not to be forgotten that in his full and flowing composition he manages the English language with a freer hand and with more native ease than any other Scottish writer. Robertson avoids Scotticisms; but Smith might be taken for an English writer not peculiarly idiomatic."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 469.

"Locke, [in his Essay on Human Understanding] Smith, [in his Wealth of Nations], chose an easy, clear, and free, but somewhat loose and verbose, style,—more concise in Locke, more elegant in Smith,—in both exempt from pedantry, but not void of ambiguity and repetition."—Ibid., i. 369.

"M. Gasser, an artist of Vienna, has executed a statue of Adam Smith, working from the only two existing portraits of the economist. Some photographs of the model and of the statue, now nearly finished, and a small fac-simile in plaster, have been exhibited for some time past in the reading-room of the Bodleian Library. M. Gasser engages to deliver the finished statue at any British port for the sum of £700. In the belief that the erection of the statue in some one of the buildings belonging to the University would be a fitting tribute to the memory of one among the most illustrious persons who have received their education at Oxford, a committee has been appointed with a view to purchasing the statue and presenting it to the University of Oxford."—March, 1867.

Smith, Albert, b. at Chertsey, England, May 24, 1816; became a member of the College of Surgeons, 1838, and attracted the attention of his brethren and the public by a series of papers in the Medical Times, entitled Jasper Buddle; or, Confessions of a Dissecting-Room Porter. He also contributed to The Mirror, Bentley's Miscellany, and Punch; wrote dramatic pieces for the Surrey Theatre, The Lyceum, and other stages; and soon found himself committed to a literary career. In 1850 he produced an entertainment called the Overland Mail; and on March 15, 1852, he commenced that exhibition of the Ascent of Mont Blanc which, for a number of years, filled the Egyptian Hall (London) with delighted auditors and spectators. He appeared in this performance for the last time only the Monday evening preceding his death, which occurred on Wednesday morning, May 23, 1860, at Fulham. He was the author of the following works:

Dec. 31, 1830, at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, whilst acting as a designer of patterns for a lace-factory in Glasgow, (he was originally designed for the ministry,) forwarded the MS. of his Life Drama (subsequently included in No. 1) to the Rev. George Gillilan, who published some extracts, with laudatory comments, in the Critic (1852) and the Eclectic Review. In 1854 he was appointed Secretary to the University of Edinburgh, (salary £300,) and retained this post until his death, Jan. 5, 1867. "But for 'The Princess,' and the 'Idylls of the King,' there would have been no 'Edwin of Deira,' in this shape and rhythm. Smith, Charlotte, 1749-1806, a daughter of Nicholas Turner, of Sussex, and a sister of Mrs. Dorset, (p. 514, supra;) before she was sixteen was so unhappy as to marry Mr. Benjamin Smith, a West India merchant, whose extravagance, improvidence, speculations, and misfortunes involved a wife and twelve children in difficulties which it required the diligent use of the mother's pen to relieve. Her life has been narrated at sufficient length by her sister, Mrs. Dorset, (this account was published, with critical comments, by Sir Walter Scott in his Lives of the Novelists;) and Sir S. E. Brydges in his Censura Literaria (viii. 239 et seq.) and Imaginative Biography, Mrs. Elwood in her Literary Ladies of England, (i. 284-309, ii. 270,) and Julia Kavanagh in her English Women of Letters, 1862, 2 vols. p. 8vo, have told us much more of this once famous lady than the modern reader cares to know. Both Cowper and Hayley were "astonished at the rapidity and excellence of Mrs. Smith's compositions" whilst engaged on The Old Manor-House. Professor George Moir considers that "her novels are extremely defective in plot," and betray "marks of haste," (Encyc. Brit., art. Romance;) and Sir Archibald Alison pronounces them "well-nigh unreadable." (Essays, ed. 1850, iii. 529.) Mathias condemns her novels, but allows her "great poetical powers, and a pathos which commands attention." (Pursuits of Lit., Dial. I., Note 26.)

Sir Walter Scott, whose heart sometimes got the better of his head and softened the critic into the eulogist, amiably—perhaps justly—remarks,

"While we allow high praise to the sweet and sad effusions of Mrs. Smith's muse, we cannot admit that by these alone she could ever have risen to the height of eminence which we are disposed to claim for her as authoress of her prose narratives. The elegance, the polish, the taste, and the feeling of this highly-gifted lady may no doubt be traced in Mrs. Charlotte Smith's poetry. But for her invention, that highest property of genius, her knowledge of the human bosom, her power of natural description, her wit and her satire, the reader must seek in her prose narratives."—Lives of the Novelists

"Some of her novels will last, and her sonnets with them, each perhaps aided by the other. There is nothing great in her; but she is natural and touching, and has hit, in the music of her sorrows, upon some of those chords which have been awakened equally, though not so well, in all human bosoms"—LEIGH HUNT: Men, Women, and Books. *Spec. of Brit. We should not omit to add that Lieutenant-General Sir Lionel Smith, Governor of Guiana, of Jamaica, and subsequently Governor of the Mauritius, where he died, Jan. 3, 1842, in his 64th year, (see *Lon. Smith, Horace, 1779-1849, and Smith, James, 1775-1839, both natives of London, and the sons of Robert Smith, Solicitor to the Board of Ordnance, varied the active pursuits of business (Horace was a stock-broker, and James his father's partner) by the pleasures of literature. Commencing joint publication by papers in The Pic-Nic, 1802, (a selection from the columns of this journal was published in 1803, 2 vols 12mo), they wrote several of the Prefaces to a new edition of Bell's British Theatre, (issued under Cumberland's name); James inserted an article in the London Review, and both of the brothers contributed from 1807 to 1810 to the Monthly Mirror. It was in this periodical that first appeared the poetical imitations (chiefly from James's pen) entitled Horace in London, which were collected into a 12mo volume in 1813, (4th ed. same year, new ed., 1815); republished the same year in Boston. Later in life they were both contributors to the New Monthly Magazine (whilst conducted by Campbell, the poet) and to other periodicals. But it was as early as 1812 that they were so fortunate as to adopt an idea of Mr Ward's, (Secretary to Drury-Lane Theatre,)—the publication of a collection of supposed Rejected Addresses presented for competition at the opening of the house. The volume, a 12mo of 126 pages, (Rejected Addresses; or, The New Theatrum Poetarum.) issued anonymously, met with great success: the public were delighted, the critics applauded, and even the poets (a genus irritabile) pressed into the service commended the felicity of the imitations.

"I think the Rejected Addresses by far the best thing of the kind since The Rolliad," writes Lord Byron (Oct 19, 1812) to John Murray. "Tell the author I forgive him were he twenty times over our satirist, and think his imitations not at all inferior to the famous ones of Hawkins Browne."

See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, i. 585.

And yet Murray had refused to buy the copyright for £20! He became its possessor in 1819, after the publication of the 16th edition, for £131. John Miller published the first edition, 1812, 12mo, at his own risk, keeping half profits and half copyright; and in 1813 he purchased the entire copyright and Horace in London, after the first edition, for £1000. The 22d edition was published in 1851, 12mo, and the 24th in 1854; Railway edition, 1861, 12mo, no plates. The first American edition was published in N. York, 1813, 12mo, and the last in Boston, 1851, 16mo. A copy of the Rejected Addresses, illustrated by 600 engravings, and extended to four volumes, was sold in the city of New York in 1869 for $365. The volume was immediately chronicled in the Edinburgh Review, (Nov. 1812, 434-51,) by Lord Jeffrey; and when his lordship, in 1843, republished this critique in a collection of his Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, he remarked, in a note,

"I take them, [the Rejected Addresses,] indeed, to be the very best imitations (and often of difficult originals) that ever were made, and, considering their great extent and variety, to indicate a talent to which I do not know where to look for a parallel."—Edit. 1863, 944.

The volume was also reviewed (together with the collection of forty-three genuine Rejected Addresses, 1812mo) in the Quarterly Review, (Sept. 1812, 172-81 and pronounced to be "executed with great humour, discrimination, and good taste." (p. 177.)

We should not omit to state that the imitations of Wordsworth, (Baby's Debut), Cobbett, (Hampshire Farmer's Address), Southey, (The Rebuilding), Coleridge, (Play-House Musings), and Crabbe, (The Theatre), the first stanza of Cui Bono? (Lord Byron), the songs entitled Drury-Lane Hustings and Theatrical Alarm-Bell (an imitation of the editor of the Morning Post), and the travesties on Macbeth, George Barnwell, and The Stranger, are by James Smith. The rest of the imitations are by Horace. Some of the Addresses have been recently republished in Parton's Humorous Poetry of the English Language. See, also, notice of Smiths' Poetical Works, infra.

To the Rejected Addresses add Imitations of Celebrated Authors, or, Imaginary Rejected Articles in Prose, by Lamb, James and Horace Smith, Prof. Wilson, Hazlitt Leigh Hunt, &c., Lon., 1826, 12mo; 4th ed., 1844, p. 8vo.

Horace Smith was also the author of a number of novels (not very successful imitations of Scott, Croly and others) and other works: of which we present a list.

The last article corrected by him for the press appears to be the paper entitled Posthumous Memoir of Myself, published immediately after his death in the New Monthly Magazine, 1849, (repub. in Bost. Liv. Age, xxiv. 72.) His name also appears among the writers of The Pic-Nic Papers, edited by Charles Dickens, Lon., 1857, p. 8vo; Phila., Nov. 1859. In 1840 (2d ed., 1841; republished, Phila., 1841, 2 vols. 12mo) he published the Memoirs, Letters, and Comic Miscellanies, in Prose and Verse, of the Late James Smith, 2 vols. p. 8vo, (see Lon. Athen., 1840, 656; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1840, 526;) and in 1842 edited Massaniello, an Historical Romance, by D. MacCarthy, 3 vols. p. 8vo, (see Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1842, 631.)

His Poetical Works were first collected in 1846, 2 vols. p. 8vo; and republished in 1851, 2 vols. in 1, p. 8vo. The Poetical Works of Horace and James Smith, edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by Epes Sargent, were pub-

Nahe! in 1 vol. 8vo. N. York, 1857. Contents: Poems, by Horace Smith; Miscellaneous; Humorous Poems by James Smith; London Lyrics; Miscellaneous; "Rejected Addresses," [by Horace and James Smith, from the 23d London ed.] Notes to "Rejected Addresses." This, the first collective edition of the works of the brothers, professes to contain the whole of the poems of Horace Smith. Peter Cunningham's Notes add to the value of the volume.

Whilst Horace, as we have seen, persisted in addressing a rather listless public through the medium of the press, the talents of James found a more successful vehicle in the acting of Charles Mathews for his aid in the entertainments of Country Cousins, Air-Ballooning, Trips to Paris, and Trip to America (he contributed gratuitously to the At Home series) he received no less than £1000. "You are the only man in London," exclaimed Mathews, "who can write what I want,—good nonsense." James was not offended by the compliment, and more than once has been heard to exclaim, when this portion of his literary career was referred to, "A thousand pounds for nonsense!"

Smith, Sir James Edward, M.D., b. at Norwich, Dec. 2, 1759, after studying medicine and botany at Edinburgh, took up his residence in London, where he became acquainted with Sir Joseph Banks; in 1784 purchased, for £1088 5s., (delivered in London,) the books, MSS., and natural history specimens of Linnaeus, (now owned by the Linnaean Society,) in 1786–87 travelled on the Continent, graduating M.D. at Leyden; in 1788, with the assistance of Sir J. Banks, Bishop Goodenough, and others, founded the Linnaean Society, of which he was elected the first president; in 1792 was employed to teach botany to Queen Charlotte and the princesses; in 1796 was married to Miss Reeve, and in 1797 removed to Norwich, where, with the exception of an annual two months' visit to London, devoted to lectures on botany at the Royal Institution, he resided until his death, knighted by the Prince Regent, 1814; unsuccessful candidate for the chair of botany at Cambridge, (being objected to as a Unitarian Dissenter,) 1818; d. at his house in Surrey Street, Norwich, March 17, 1828. At the time of his death he was one of the deacons of the religious congregation to which he was attached, and he composed several of the poetical pieces contained in a volume of Hymns of Public Worship, selected for the Use of the Congregation assembling at the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, (1826.) In all the relations of life he was most estimable; and, as a leader in the particular branch of research which he did so much to illustrate and expand,

"It was his constant, earnest desire to banish jealousy and rivalry from the pursuits of science, and to cultivate a union and good understanding between the botanists of all nations. He found the science of botany, when he approached it, locked up in a dead language; he set it free, by transfusing into it his own. He found it a severe study, fitted only for the recluse, he left it of easy acquisition to all. In the hands of his predecessors, with the exception of his immortal master, it was dry, technical, and scholastic, in his it was adorned with grace and elegance, and might attract the poet as well as the philosopher."—*Life of Sir J. Smith, or Smyth, Captain John, b. at Willoughby, Lincolnshire, 1579, d. in London, 1631, a descendant of the Smythes of Cuedrley, has for nearly three centuries maintained the unparalleled honour of being the most distinguished member of the most numerous family (patronymically speaking) of all the tribes of men. Silver-Tongue Henry had more eloquence, Cambridge John more divinity, Greek Thomas more learning, Adam and James Edward more science, and Sydney more wit; but neither of these, nor all of these, enjoy the renown which attaches to the traveller, soldier, sailor, legislator, and ruler, who was equally at home in Turkey and America, alike pre-eminent in the palaces of princes and the huts of savages. And, whilst his fame is thus world-wide, to the grateful veneration of the children of the New World he has a peculiar claim: in the words of an eloquent American biographer,

"Wherever upon this continent the English language is spoken, his deeds should be recounted and his memory hallowed. His services should not only be not forgotten, but should be 'freshly remembered.' His name should not only be honored by the silent canvas and the cold marble, but his praises should dwell living upon the lips of men, and should be handed down by fathers to their children. Poetry has imagined nothing more stirring and romantic than his life and adventures, and History upon her ample page has recorded few more honorable and smooth names."—GEOFFREY S. HILLARD, Life of Captain John Smith, in Sparks's Amer. Biog., II 171-307.

To this volume, the authorities cited below, and Smith's own graphic narrations, we must refer the reader for the details of his "stirring and romantic life and adventures," whilst we proceed to notice him in a capacity not included in the roll of titles of honour which we have already rehearsed.

See, also, pp. 32, 34, 42, 48, and 50, for fuller titles of Nos 2, 3, 4, 8, and 9. And see the collations in Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 2422-23. A copy of the edit of 1626 and one of the edit. of 1632 are in the library of Harvard College; and a copy of the edit. of 1627 is in the library of the Mass. Hist. Soc. A large part of the Generall Historie appeared in Purchas's Pilgrimes, vol. iv., 1625; and the whole will be found in Pinkerton's Collection, vol. xiii., 1813. It was republished, together with his True Travels, (No. 8, infra), in 2 vols. 8vo, Richmond, Va., in 1819. Of the Sixe Bookes into which the Generall Historie is divided, Smith wrote the whole of Books II. and IV. The other Books, narratives of his friends and companions, are edited by Smith. The Rev. William Simons, compiler of the Proceedings annexed to A Map of Virginia, (No. 2, supra), "extracted from the authors following"—Book III.—"the history of the colony at Jamestown during Smith's residence there. Another word on this book and its chief hero. One of Smith's latest commentators, Mr. Charles Deane, in his Notes on Wingfield's tract "A Discourse of Virginia," (Boston, 1859, sm. fol., p. p.), remarks that the "current story" of Smith's rescue by Pocahontas "first appears in the Generall Historie," (p. 31;) and he then proceeds to argue against the probability of the oft-told tale. See, also, to the same effect, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1867, (by H. B. Adams.) Something on the other side, illustrative also of other points in a most interesting history, will be found in a paper on The Marriage of Pocahontas, by Wyndham Robertson, read before the Virginia Historical and Philosophical Society, and published in The Historical Magazine, (N. York,) Oct. 1860, 289-96. Mr. H. B. Grigsby, of Norfolk, also holds fast to the old Virginia faith on this theme. See, also, Pocahontas and her Companions, by Rev. E. D. Neill, Albany, 1869, pp. 32. There has recently appeared, Pocahontas, or, The Founding of Virginia; a Poem, in Three Cantos, by Rev. O. P. Hiller, 1866.

6. An Accidence; or, The Pathway to Experience, necessary for all Young Seamen, &c., Lon., 1626, 4to.

8. The True Travels, Adventures, and Observations of Captaine John Smith in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, from Anno Domini 1593 to 1629, &c., together with a Continuation of his Generall History of Virginia, Summerles, New England, and their Proceedings since 1624 to this present 1629, &c., 1630, fol., pp. 59, not including title, &c., 6 leaves. Ingles, 1435, £6 6s.; T. H. Morrell, Jan. 1869, 454, $50 1664, fol. See No. 5. Reprinted in Seer gedenckwaerdige Vojagen van J. Sanderson, H. Timberley, en J. Smith, door Europa, Asia, en America, &c., Amst., 1678, 4to, and in Churchill's Collec., vol. ii., 1708. See Palfrey's Hist. of N. England, vol. i., N. Amer. Rev., xvi. 270, (by John Everett.)

"I made acquaintance with brave Captain Smith as a boy in my grandfather's library at home, where I remember how I would sit at the good old man's knees, with my favourite volume on my own, spelling out the exploits of our Virginian hero. I loved to read of Smith's travels, sufferings, captivity, escapes, not only in America, but Europe!"—Henry Warrington, in Thackeray's Virginians, vol. ii. ch. xxxii. Pocahontas.

9. Advertisements for the Unexperienced Planters of New England, or any where; or, The Pathway to Experience to erect a Plantation, &c., 1631, 4to. Jadis, 253, £2 15s.; Gordonstoun, 2204, £3. There is a copy in the library of Harvard University, and the work is reprinted in Collec. Mass. Hist. Soc., 3d Ser., vol. iii. New ed., Bost., 1865, pp. viii., 72, 4to, 250 copies, and some copies 1 p.

In this work Smith refers to a History of the Sea, on which he was then engaged—it was probably never completed. Watt (Bibl. Brit.) ascribes two works to him—I. The Innocent cleared, or a Vindication of Captaine John Smith, 1648, 4to; II. England's Improvement Revived, 1670, 73, 4to—which are not from his pen. We shall restore them to their lawful owners when these shall be reached,—if we ever get that far down in this multitudinous name. It is to be regretted that the Latin life of Smith by Henry Wharton, (1664-1694-5), supra, has not been published. It is, however, a satisfaction to know that it was put into requisition by Mr. Hillard (see his Preface) when compiling his biographical sketch of the bold "Captaine: sometime Governour of Virginia and Admirall of New England." Other notices of our author (for it is in this capacity only that his achievements can be here enumerated) will be found in Stow's Surveys of London; Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1840, i. 275; Wood's Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 650; Beverly's Virginia: Seward's Anec.; Belknap's Amer. Biog., i. 240-319; Duyokinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., i. 5; E. Everett's Orations, in, Index; R. C. There are recent Lives of Captain Smith, by W. G. Simms, N. York, 1846, 12mo; by the Author of Uncle Philip's Conversations, N. York, 18mo, and by George Canning Hill, Bost., 1858, 18mo: see, also, ROBINSON, Mrs. EDWARD, No. 8. Nor must we omit to notice a recent publication—Letter of John Smith to Lord Bacon, 1618—in the Hist. Mag., (N. York,) 1861, 193–196: see, also, 310. "His body was deposited in Sepulchre's Church choir, on the south side thereof," with a rather florid epitaph, of which the following are the first and last lines:

"Here lies one conquer'd that hath conquer'd kings!

Oh, may his soul in sweet Elysium sleep!"

The verses, some by men of mark, which accompany his General Historie and others of his works, are highly eulogistic of his private character and public deeds.

Edward Robinson addresses him as

"Thou that to pass the world's four parts dost deem

No more than 'twere to go to bed or drinke," and Thomas Carlton relieves us of the fear that he was wont, soldier and sailor like, to "drinke" too easily, by the assertion,

"I never knew a Warrayer yet, but thee,

From wine, tobacco, debts, dice, oaths, so free"

Smith, John, the most eminent divine of both his names, and generally known to scholars as "John Smith of Cambridge," was b. at Achurch, near Oundle, Northamptonshire, 1618, entered at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 1636, Fellow of Queen's College, 1644, became a tutor and read a mathematical lecture for some years in the public schools; d. August 7, 1652. In the sermon at his funeral by a distinguished Fellow of Queen's College, (see PATRICK, SYMON, D D, No 1,) he is represented as "a man of great abilities, vast learning, and possessing also every grace and virtue which can improve and adorn human nature." He published nothing; but after his death appeared his famous (9) Select Discourses, with his Life, Death, and Funeral Sermon, by Symon Patrick, (and Preface by John Worthington, D D,) Lon., 1660, 4to; 2d ed., Camb., 1673, 4to; 3d ed., (reprinted at the suggestion of Bishop Jebb,) with his Life, by Sir David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes, Lon., 1821, 8vo; 4th ed., with Patrick's Sermon, corrected and revised by Henry Griffin Williams, Camb., 1859, 8vo. Lord Hailes published an edition in 1756, Edin., 12mo, in which the Discourse of Prophecy, (reprinted in Bishop Watson's Tracts, vol. iv., 1785, and also translated by Le Clerc into Latin and prefixed to his Commentary on the Prophets,) and that on the opinion of Aristotle on the Immortality of the Soul, are omitted. The quotations are translated. Another abridgment, with a Brief Memoir of the author by the Rev. John King, was pub. Lon., 1820, 12mo. The Discourse on The Excellency and Nobleness of True Religion, omitting the quotations from the Greeks, Romans, and Rabbis, was repub. in 1864.

"All is learned, ingenious, and eminently pious"—ALEX. KNOX.

"I never got so much good among all my books by a whole day's plodding in a study, as by an hour's discourse I have got with him. For he was not a library locked up, nor a book clasped, but stood open for any to converse withal that had a mind to learn. Yea, he was a fountain running over, labouring to do good to those who perhaps had no mind to receive it. None more free and communicative than he was to such as desired to discourse with him; nor would he grudge to be taken off from his studies upon such an occasion. It may be truly said of him, that a man might always come better from him, and his mouth could drop sentences as easily as an ordinary man's could speak sense."—BISHOP PATRICK, Funeral Sermon on John Smith.

"A writer of great erudition and strength of mind"—SOUTHWELL.

"Not the least star in the constellation of Cambridge men, the contemporaries of Taylor, &c."—COLERIDGE.

Smith, Joseph, b. at Sharon, Vermont, 1805, murdered at Carthage, Illinois, 1844, widely known as the founder of the Mormons, but noticed here only as a literary impostor, published, as a divine revelation, a corrupt version of a religious romance (The Manuscript Found) written in 1809 by Solomon Spaulding, a Presbyterian preacher, and left in MS. by him. Under Smith's auspices this was given to the world as The Book of Mormon an Account written by the Hand of Mormon, upon Plates taken from the Plates of Nephi; by Joseph Smith, Jr., Author and Proprietor, Palmyra, 1830, 12mo. Smith professes to have translated this English version from the original Plates of Nephi, (discovered to him by the ministry of angels,) Oliver Cowdery acting as his scribe. The Third American Edition of the Book of Mormon was pub. at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1841, (repub. 1841 in London in English, Danish, French, German, Italian, and Welsh, each 12mo.) again, New York, Nov. 1853, 12mo. The "late revelations" will be found in a vol. entitled Doctrines and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, selected from the Revelations of God, by Joseph Smith, President, of which many editions have been published, new edit., in English, Danish, and Welsh, each 12mo, Lon., 1845. Smith, Rev. Stephen R. See Memoirs of, by T. J. Sawyer, Bost., 1852.

Smith, Sydney, b. at Woodford, Essex, 1771, was educated at Winchester School and at New College, Oxford, where he obtained a Fellowship in 1790, resided for six months at a boarding-school at Mont Villiers, Normandy, and there acquired a familiar knowledge of French; Curate of Nether-Avon, Wiltshire, 1794-96, afterwards became tutor to Mr. Beach, and removed to Edinburgh, where he resided for five years, (acting as minister of Charlotte Episcopal Chapel,) and where he founded the Edinburgh Review, editing the first number, (see JEFFREY, FRANCIS, LORD, pp. 960-961, supra;) in 1804 removed to London, (where about 1800 he had married Miss Pybus,) where he preached at the Foundling Hospital, &c., delivered lectures at the Royal Institution, became greatly distinguished as a wit, and not less famous as a brilliant and most unsparring critic in the Edinburgh Review, Rector of Foston-le-Clay, Yorkshire, 1806; Prebendary of Bristol, 1828, Rector of Combe-Florey, Somersetshire, 1829; Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's Cathedral, 1831; d. at his house in Green Street, Mayfair, London, Feb. 22, 1845, and was buried in the Kensall Green Cemetery.

See Blackw. Mag., xxi. 859, 861; Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, i. ch. viii., ii. ch. ii. Of these, about ten are republications with alterations; the other forty were here first published. These vols. and No. 2 were censured by J. W. Croker in Lon. Quar. Rev., May, 1809, 387; and the former met with little favour at the hands of John Foster in Eclectic Rev., May and June, 1809, (repub. in Foster's Crit. Essays, i. 285.) The London Monthly Review remarks, "Mr Smith possesses a command of words, and he is a spirited and sensible declaimer."

"The present publication is by far the worst of all his performances, avowed or imputed. Literary merit it has none; but in arrogance, presumption, and absurdity it far outdoes all his former outdoings."—J. W. CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1810, 135-64.

"He is universally admitted to have been a great reasoner, and the greatest master of ridicule that has appeared among us since Swift."—LORD MACAULAY, 1847: Letter to Mrs. Sydney Smith, in Memoirs of Rev. S. Smith.

"I find my father here, and indeed in almost every sketch of him, compared to Swift in the character of his writings. It is for others to decide upon the justness of the comparison, but there is one difference I ought, and am proud, to point out. That there is not a single line in them that might not be placed before the purity of youth, or that is unfit for the eye of a woman, that he has exercised his powers of wit and sarcasm to the utmost, without ever sulling his pages with impurities or degrading his talents and profession by irreligion; and this, I believe, can in very few instances be asserted of any other eminent humorous writer, either French or English, who have used such powers to any great extent. Lord John Russell, in writing of my father, says on this subject, 'Too much indulgence has been shown to the extravagance, dishonesty, and domestic infidelity of men of wit, as if the "light that led astray was light from heaven." It is not light from heaven, but flashes from a volcano which has its seat in hell.'"—LADY HOLLAND Memoirs of Rev. S. Smith.

"If Mr. Sydney Smith had not been the greatest and most brilliant of wits, he would have been the most remarkable man of his time for a sound and vigorous understanding and great reasoning powers; and if he had not been distinguished for these, he would have been the most eminent and the purest writer of English."—SIR HENRY HOLLAND Memoirs, &c.

On this dictum see Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1855.

"The first remark that I made to myself, after listening to Mr. Sydney Smith's conversation, was, that if he had not been known as the wittiest man of his day, he would have been accounted one of the wisest."—EDWARD EVERETT Memoirs, &c.

"Smith's reputation here then [at Edinburgh, 1797-1802] was the same as it has been throughout his life, that of a wise wit. Was there ever more sense combined with more hilarious jocularity?"—LORD COCKBURN Memoirs of his Time, ch. iii.

"He had no philosophic turn, little poetic fancy, and scarce any eloquence, but a prodigious fund of innate sagacity, vast powers of humorous illustration, and a clear perception of the practical bearing of every question. . . . In society he was very much sought after, from the fame of his convivial talents and the real force of his colloquial expressions; but there was a constant straining after effect, and too little interchange of thought to raise his discourse to a very high charm."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALMON Hist. of Europe, 1815-1862, ch. v. See, also, his Essays, 1850, iii. 633.

"His wit and humour were always unpremeditated, and seemed not so much the result of efforts to amuse, as the overflowing of a mind full of imagery, instantly ready to combine with whatever passed in conversation. . . . I thought him the best preacher I ever heard, and I know of no better sermons than those he has published."

"There are passages in them tinged with the wit which made him so delightful a companion out of the pulpit, but this does not in the least impair their seriousness. He seems to me, in these discourses, to be at all times equally earnest, eloquent, and sound in the view he takes of his subject, and the more I read them the more I find them to contain."—C. R. LESLIE Autobiog. Recollec., 1860, ch. v.

"But Sydney, Sydney is, in his way, inimitable, and, as a conversational wit, beats all the men I have ever met. Curran's fancy went much higher, but also much lower. Sydney, in his gayest flights, though boisterous, is never vulgar."—T. MOORE Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, v. 315. See, also, Index.

Bache, M.D.) 5. Lecture delivered over the Remains of Jeremy Bentham, June 9, 1832, Lon., 8vo. Bentham was not disposed to part with his friend Smith, and the latter complied with the philosopher's rather erratic fancy:

"I became acquainted with Dr. Southwood Smith. On visiting him, we saw an object which I have often heard celebrated, and had thought would be revolting, but found, on the contrary, an agreeable sight, this is the skeleton of Jeremy Bentham. It was at Bentham's request that the skeleton, dressed in the same dress he habitually wore, stuffed out to an exact resemblance of life, and with a portrait-mask in wax,—the best I ever saw—sits there as assistant to Dr. Smith in the entertainment of his guests, and companion of his studies. The figure leans a little forward, resting the hands on a stout stick which Bentham always carried, and had named 'Dapple'. The attitude is quite easy, the expression on the whole mild, winning, yet highly individual."—Miss S. M. FULLER quoted by John Neal in Atlantic Mon., Nov. 1866, 561

If the two friends conversed, we suppose (to borrow an old pun) that it was in one of the "dead" languages. We certainly should have no hesitation in declining such a bequest, coupled with such conditions, even if the testator, legacy, and proposed "companion" were our oldest and dearest friend. 6. On Education, 8vo. 7. Animal Physiology, (in *Lib. Smith, William, LL.D., Ph.D., well known as editor and co-author of the Classical Dictionaries which bear his name, was b. in London in 1814, educated at the University of London, (now University College,) where he gained the first prizes in the Latin and Greek classes, and subsequently kept his terms at Gray's Inn. Fortunately for the cause of classical education, philology proved a stronger attraction than law, and those who had admired the proficiency of the student were gratified by his election to the chair of the Greek, Latin, and German Languages in the Independent Colleges of Highbury and Homerton. When in 1850 these institutions were united with Coward College, and the three were incorporated under the name of New College, London, Dr. Smith was appointed Professor of the Greek and Latin Languages and Literature, in 1858 he became Classical Examiner in the University of London, and in 1867 editor of Murray's Quarterly Review. In our enumeration of his publications it will be observed that we adopt a homogeneal in preference to a chronological arrangement.

These three Dictionaries (in all, 6 vols. med. 8vo, 1598 wood-cuts and 4 maps, £6 3s.) form a complete Encyclopedia of Classical Antiquity,—superseding the time-honoured manuals of Adam, Potter, and Lemprière.

"I have been for some time in the habit of using the Dictionaries of Antiquity and Ancient Biography, as well as the Dictionary of Ancient Geography, and I have no hesitation in saying, from my knowledge of them, that they are far superior to any other publication of the same sort in our language. They are works which every student of literature ought to consult habitually, and which are indispensable to every person engaged in original researches into any department of antiquity."—SIR G. CORNEWALL LEWIS.

"I have had frequent occasion to consult these works, and have derived from them great assistance and instruction."—GEORGE GROZ.

Dr. Vaughan, (Harrow,) Dr. Hawtrey, (Eton,) and Rev. W. H. Thompson (Trin. Coll., Camb.) unite in commendation of these great works.

"One of our first English scholars,—one who deals with the history and philosophy of the ancient classics, as well as with the technicalities of their language."—Lon. Lat. Gazette, 1862, 39.

To this it is proper to add that Dr. Smith's reputation as an English writer is only inferior to that which he enjoys as a classical philologist and philosophical commentator. His treatise on language, and articles on classical biography, in the Penny Cyclopædia, must be carefully perused by the student.

Smollett, Tobias George, M.D., the grandson of Sir James Smollett, of Bonhill, was born in the family mansion of Dalquhurn, parish of Cardross, Dumbartonshire, Scotland, 1721; studied at Dumbarton, and subsequently at Glasgow, in which city he also served an apprenticeship to a surgeon, lost his grandfather, who made no provision for his livelihood, in his 18th year; came to London at nineteen, and, after unsuccessfully offering The Regicide for the stage, at twenty sailed as surgeon's mate in the unfortunate expedition to Carthage, of which he gives graphic accounts in his Compendium of Voyages and in Roderick Random, settled for some time in the West Indies, where he fell in love with Anne Lascelles, whom he married in 1747; returned to London in 1748, and, after vainly trying his fortune as a physician, commenced that literary life which, with more or less application, and, despite his frequent pecuniary embarrassments, certainly with more than average success, he followed until his death, which occurred near Leghorn, Italy, after a long illness, October 21, 1771. For the details of his social and literary career we refer the reader to the biographical sketches of Drs. Anderson and Moore and Mr. Roscoe, and the other authorities cited below.

"The person of Smollett," remarks Dr. Moore, "was stout and well proportioned, his countenance engaging, his manner reserved, with a certain air of dignity that seemed to indicate that he was not unconscious of his own powers. He was of a disposition so humane and generous that he was ever ready to serve the unfortunate, and on some occasions to assist them beyond what his circumstances could justify. . . . His learning, diligence, and natural acuteness would have rendered him eminent in the science of medicine had he persevered in that profession; other parts of his character were ill suited for augmenting his practice. He could neither stoop to impose on credulity nor humour caprice."

Dr. Moore's portrait is sufficiently favourable—a contentious disposition and domineering temper, a lavish indulgence in conversational sarcasm and written invective, are freely charged upon one who seems to be equally entitled to the praise of the "humane and generous" traits accorded by this biographer.

The order of his publications was as follows: 1. Advice. a Satire, 1746, 4to. 2. Reproof, a Satire, being a Second Part of Advice, 1747, 4to. The severity of these hostile missives made the author many enemies. 3. The Adventures of Roderick Random, Lon., 1748, 2 vols. 12mo; 1750, 2 vols. 12mo; 7th ed., 1768, 2 vols. 12mo; 10th ed., 1778, 2 vols. 12mo; Edin., 1784, 2 vols. 8vo, in German, Berlin, 1790, 2 vols. 8vo, and in other foreign languages; in English, last edits, Lon., 1815, 24mo; 2 vols. 18mo; by T. Roscoe, 1836, 12mo; with Memoir, illust. by Phiz, 1857, 12mo; new ed., 1866, 12mo; 1867, 6d. This imitation of Le Sage at once made the author famous. 4. The Regicide; a Tragedy, 1749, 4to. Written in his 18th year. 5. The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle: in which are included the Memoirs of a Lady of Quality, 1751, 4 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., pruned of some indecencies, 1751, 4 vols. 12mo; 1758, 4 vols. 12mo; 1781, 4 vols. 8vo; 1784, 3 vols. 12mo; many edits.: 1815, 2 vols. 24mo; 1823, 4 vols. 18mo; 2 vols. 24mo; by T. Roscoe, cuts by G. Cruikshank, 1836, 2 vols. 12mo; new ed., 1857, 12mo. The Lady of Quality was Lady Vane, who paid a large sum for this record of her shame. It elicited a number of tracts, the titles of some of which are recorded in Bohn's Lowndes, 2433. 6. Essay on the External Use of Water, &c., 1752, 4to. Published at a time when he attempted unsuccessfully to practise medicine at Bath. He subsequently retired to Chelsea, and continued his literary employments. 7. The Adventures of Ferdinand Count Fathom, 1753, 3 vols. 12mo; 1782, 2 vols. 8vo. Perhaps the most indecent production of a not too scrupulous writer. In this case prolixity has proved a safeguard. 8. Don Quixote; translated from the Spanish, to which is prefixed some Account of the Author's Life, 1755, 2 vols. 4to. Frequently reprinted in 4 vols. 18mo; also in 2 vols. 24mo, and ed. by T. Roscoe, 3 vols. 12mo. But see JARVIS, or JERVAS, CHARLES; LOCKHART, JOHN GIBSON, No. 5; MOTTEUX, PETER ANTHONY; and Lord Woodhouselee's (Tytler) Essay on the Principles of Translation. His lordship shows that Smollett's translation is based upon that of Jarvis, than which it has less fidelity and more grossness. Smollett's version, so called, is indeed of little value, and by no means transfers the humour of the original—it, however, transferred many guineas to the pockets of the ostensible translator. Coppel's Illustrations to the Adventures of Don Quixote, 25 engravings, imp. fol., by Cochin, Tardieu, &c., are highly esteemed. See, also, Doré's Don Quichotte, with 130 large and 200 small engravings, Paris, 1864, 2 vols. fol. 9. A Compendium of Authentic and Entertaining Voyages, 1757, 7 vols. 12mo. Anon. 10. The Reprisals; or, The Tars of Old England; a Comedy, 1757, 8vo. Successful. 11. A Compleat History of England, deduced from the Descent of Julius Cæsar to the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1748, &c., 4 vols. 4to: i., ii., iii., 1757, (reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., June, 1757;) iv. 1758, 2d ed., (sixpenny weekly Nov.,) 1758–60, 11 vols. 8vo; Continuation, 1748–60, 4 vols. 8vo, 1763, (reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., April and May, 1763;) vol. v., written by William Guthrie, p. 751, supra, in Smollett's absence,) 1763–65 inc., 8vo, 1765. The contents of these 5 vols. 8vo were also pub. in 2 vols. 4to, 1766. New ed. of the whole work, 1771–84, 13 vols. 8vo. In 1789 the booksellers repub. that portion of Smollett's History which stretches from the Revolution to the death of George III., (1689–1760,) in 5 vols. 8vo, as a Continuation of Hume's History, and the two histories, as we have already seen, (HUGHES, THOMAS SMART, D.D., No. 4, HUME, DAVID, Nos. 3, &c.,) have been in the habit of keeping company unto this day,—later continuations being sometimes appended to them. Last edits. of Hume, Smollett, and Hughes, Longman, 1864, 8 vols. 8vo, £4; Bell & Daldy, 1865–66, 18 vols. cr. 8vo, £3 12s. For the reign of George III., Robert Bissett's History (p. 194, supra) has been recommended. Smollett's History is never republished, and probably never will be. One of the 50 copies on 1 p., r. 8vo, 5 vols., W. Pickering, 1827, (see HUME, DAVID, No. 11,) in calf by Hayday, was sold at Fowle's sale, Dec. 1864, No. 675, for $187.50. The fact, often repeated, that the Transactions of "One Thousand Eight Hundred and Three Years," (we quote his own title-page,) which fill his four quarto volumes, (1757–58,) were written in fourteen months, forbids confidence in the same ratio in which it excites surprise. The "uncommon spirit and correctness of his style" have been praised by Sir Walter Scott, and his statements are doubtless often correct; (though, indeed, in many cases, as Dr. Johnson said to the Lichfield alderman, it is "impossible that he should know it;") but the cautious student will be unwilling to take him as authority. Notices of the History will be found in the Crit. Rev.; Dr. Thomas Comber's Vindication of the Revolution in England, 1668, &c., 1758, 8vo, Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lects. XXVI. and XXVIII.; Warburton's Letters (from a Late Eminent Prelate, &c.) to Hurd, Lett. CXXV.; Nichols's Lit. Anec., viii. 229, (letter of Dr. Godwyn,) Goodhugh's E. G. Lib. Man, xlv., (letter of Dr. R. Farmer;) Lord Brougham's Men of Lett. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, 246, n.; Edin. Rev., iii. 16, (by Dr. John Allen,) lxx. 149.

If nobody else profited by the History, Smollett certainly did,—to the extent (including the Continuation) of £2000 at least. The proposals of the sixpenny weekly reprint were widely circulated in the pews of the parish churches throughout England; and it is asserted that 20,000 copies were sold in less than a month.

12. The Adventures of Sir Launcelot Greaves, 1762, 2 vols. 12mo; 1782, 2 vols. 8vo; 1823, 18mo; by T. Roscoe, 12mo. A poor imitation of Don Quixote, (see Tucknor's Hist. of Span. Lit., ed. 1863, iii. 440,) originally pub. in the British Magazine, 1760–61, whilst the author was imprisoned for a libel (in the Critical Review) on Admiral Knowles. Sir Launcelot was imitated in the Spiritual Quixote, The Amiable Quixote, The Female Quixote, &c.

13. Gil Blas; translated from the French of Le Sage, 1761, 4 vols. 12mo; 4th ed., 1773, 12mo; 5th ed., 1781, 4 vols. 12mo; 6th ed., 1792, 4 vols. 12mo; 7th ed., 1797, 4 vols. 12mo; 1802, 3 vols. 8vo; some 1 p.; last edits.: 2 vols. 24mo; 4 vols. 12mo; by T. Roscoe, 1835 2 vols. 12mo; Gigoux's plates, 1836, (also 1838–39,) 2 vols. r. 8vo; also in 8vo and 12mo; Smirke's plates, 4 vols. 12mo; illust. ed., 1841, 8vo; also with text revised by Dr. B. H. Malkin, 1859, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Illust. Lib.), new ed., 1861, 18mo; N. York, 1862, Bost., 1864, 8 vols. 16mo.

"The English author is true to the sense, manner, and spirit of the original, and is often extremely happy in the interchange of particular idioms."—LORD WOODHOUSELEE, (TYTLER) But see Lon. Athen., 1856, 461.

14. With FRANKLIN, THOMAS, (p. 629, supra), and others, The Works of M. de Voltaire; translated from the French; with Notes, Historical and Critical, in monthly 12mo 8s. 6d., 37 in all, Lon., 1761–70, (also '74.) See Lon. Month. Rev., 1763, ii. 273. It has been asserted that Smollett and Franklin had no other connection with this translation than the sale of the use of their names; but this is disputed. 15. The Present State of all Nations, 1764, 8 vols. 8vo, also 1768. His share in this was small. 16. Travels through France and Italy, &c., 1766, 2 vols. 8vo; Dubl., 1766, 2 vols. 8vo, Lon., 1778, 2 vols. 12mo.

"Distinguished by acuteness of remark and shrewdness of expression,—by strong sense and pointed humour."—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Life of Smollett, in Lives of the Novelists.

"For the most part an unattractive record of annoyances and discomforts, marked by considerable energy of expression, but wearisome from its sameness."—GEORGE S. HILLARD. Six Months in Italy, 5th ed., 1855, 511.

17. The History and Adventures of an Atom, 1749, (really 1769,) 2 vols. 12mo, 2d ed., 1769, 2 vols. 12mo; 10th ed., 1778, 2 vols. 12mo, Edin., 1784, 2 vols. 8vo; Lon., 1786, 2 vols. 8vo, and later edits. Roscoe, 1831, 12mo, with cuts by G. Cruikshank, 1836, 2 vols. 12mo, Leipzig, 1846, sq. 18mo; Lon., 1857, 12mo; 1861, 12mo. Esteemed the best of his novels.

"The novel of Humphrey Clinker is, I do think, the most laughable story that has ever been written since the goodly art of novel-writing began. Winifred Jenkins and Tabitha Bramble must keep Englishmen on the grin for ages yet to come, and in their letters and the story of their lives there is a perpetual fount of sparkling laughter as inexhaustible as Bladud's well."—W. M. THACKERAY. Eng. Humourists Hogarth, Smollett, and Fielding.

See Mrs. Stone's Chronicles of Fashion, 2d ed., 1846, ii. 11, n.; ANSTET, CHRISTOPHER. 19. Independence, an Ode, Glasg., 1773, 4to. Printed, with Observations, by Prof. Richardson. See Lon. Month. Rev., 1773, ii. 500. 20. The Adventures of Telemachus; translated from the French of Fénelon, Lon., 1776, 2 vols. 12mo.

In 1756 he became the first editor of The Critical Review, (a Tory opponent of the Whig organ, The Monthly Review;) subsequently contributed the histories of France, Italy, and Germany (for which he is said to have been paid £1575) to the Modern Part of An Universal History, 1759–64, 42 vols. 8vo, (Charts and Maps, 1766, fol.,) and from May 29, 1762, to Feb. 12, 1763, published The Briton,—opposed within a week, and killed in less than a year, by John Wilkes's North Briton. As a poet he is best known by his Tears of Scotland, (written in 1746,) elicited by the foray of the Duke of Cumberland in Scotland after the suppression of 'the Rebellion of 1745; and his Ode to Leven Water.

"The few poems which he has left have a portion of delicacy which is not to be found in his novels; but they have not, like those prose fictions, the strength of a master's hand. Were he to live over again, we might wish him to write more poetry, in the belief that his poetical talent would improve by exercise; but we should be glad to have more of his novels just as they are."—THOMAS CAMPBELL. Spectator, &c.

We beg leave to dissent: we could much better afford to lose those we have, than to take more, "just as they are." Several editions of his works have been published:

I. Plays and Poems; with Memoirs of his Life, Lon., 1777, 8vo; 1784, 8vo. II. Poems, with those of Johnson, Parnell, and Gray, with Memoirs, &c. by G. Gillilan, all in 1 vol. 8vo, Edin., 1855. III. Miscellaneous Works, with a Short Account of the Author, and plates by Rowlandson, Edin., 1790, 6 vols. 8vo; 1809, 5 vols. 8vo; with Memoirs by Robert Anderson, M.D., 1796, 6 vols. 8vo; again, in 6 vols. 8vo: 2d ed., 1800; 3d ed., 1806, 4th ed., 1811; 5th ed., 1817; 6th ed., 1820; Lon. and Edin., 1824, 12 vols. 12mo. Anderson's Life of Smollett, with Critical Observations, was pub. separately, 1803, 8vo. IV. Works, with Memoirs by John Moore, M.D., Lon., 1797, 8 vols. 8vo. V. Miscellaneous Works, complete in one volume. Roderick Random, Humphrey Clinker, Peregrine Pickle, Launcelot Greaves, Count Fathom, Adventures of an Atom, Travels, Plays, &c.: with Memoir by Thomas Roscoe, Lon., med. 8vo, 1840; again, 1841, 1843, 1845, 1850, 1853, 1860, 1867; N York, 1857, 6 vols. 12mo. Museum, v. 209; Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1858: Atlantic Monthly, June, 1859; FIELDING, HENRY, (p. 595, supra.) and especially the Autobiography of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Carlyle, 1861, chaps. iv., vii., ix. See, also, Some Account of the Family of Smollett of Bonhill, (from J. Irving's Hist. of Dumbartonshire,) 2d ed., 1860, 4to. In most of these authorities the critics display their ingenuity, sometimes their judgment, in running contrasts between Smollett and Fielding. Sir Walter Scott's parallel is particularly commended to the reader.

"Smollett's humour arises from the situation of the persons or the peculiarity of their external appearance, as from Roderick Random's carryot locks, which hung down over his shoulders like a pound of candles, or Strap's ignorance of London, and the blunders that follow it. There is a tone of vulgarity about all his productions. The incidents frequently resemble detached anecdotes taken from a newspaper or magazine, and, like those in 'Gil Bias,' might happen to a hundred other characters. He exhibits the ridiculous accidents and reverses to which human life is liable,—not the stuff of which it is composed. He seldom probes to the quick, or penetrates beyond the surface, and, therefore, he leaves no stings in the minds of his readers, and in this respect is far less interesting than Fielding. His novels always enliven and never tire us, we take them up with pleasure, and lay them down without any strong feeling of regret. We look on and laugh as spectators of a highly amusing scene, without closing in with the combats or being made parties to the event."—HAZLITT Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. VI.

How critics disagree!

"Smollett seems to have had more touch of romance than Fielding, but not so profound and intuitive a knowledge of humanity's hidden treasures. There is nothing in his works comparable to Parson Adams, but then, on the other hand, Fielding has not any thing of the kind equal to Strap. Partridge is dry and hard, compared with this poor barber-boy, with his generous overflows of affection. Roderick Random, indeed, with its varied delineation of life, is almost a romance. Its hero is worthy of his name. He is the sport of fortune, rolled about through the 'many ways of wretchedness,' almost without resistance, but ever catching those tastes of joy which are everywhere to be relished by those who are willing to receive them. We seem to roll on with him and get delectably giddy in his company."—SIR T. N. TALFOURD New Month. Mag., and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"Smollett inherited from nature a strong sense of ridicule, a great fund of original humour, and a happy versatility of talent, by which he could accommodate his style to almost every species of writing. He could adopt, alternately, the solemn, the lively, the sarcastic, the burlesque, and the vulgar. To these qualifications he joined an inventive genius and a vigorous imagination."—LORD WOODHOUSELEE, (TYTLER) Essay on the Principles of Translation.

"Smollett had much penetration, though he is frequently too vulgar to please; but his knowledge of men and matters is unquestionable."—MATTHEW Parnell's of Lit., Dial. I, Note 26.

"Life is no longer picturesque enough to produce a match for Smollett in descriptive humour."—SIR D. K. SANDFORD The Rise and Progress of Lit., 1848, 12mo.

“His object is to teach students, and readers generally, how to read history for themselves, to show them the path, and furnish them the best lights for pursuing it, to enable them to form a just estimate of the principal authors, and to bring forward in bold relief those prominent parts of history to which their attention should chiefly be directed. He adopts a method at once perspicuous and well suited to the end he has in view. No writer could be more impartial. . . . As a critic, his discernment is quick, his decisions fair and judicious. . . . His style is perspicuous and forcible, without elaborate ornament or studied diction.”—JARED SPARKS, Preface, ut supra

“When we read these Lectures, we are at no loss to understand why Cambridge has produced of late years so many illustrious thinkers. For two entire generations the political intellect of that university was under the training of a man who was perhaps better fitted for an instructor in the great social questions of the modern world than any one who has filled the chair of professor in this country.”—*Westm. This house and museum, (valued at upwards of £50,000,) together with £30,000 three per cents and a house in Lincoln's Inn Fields for its support, bequeathed in perpetuity to the nation, for the benefit of students in the arts, and especially for the advancement of architectural knowledge and the improvement of the public taste. Somers, John, Lord Somers, one of the most illustrious characters of English political history, the son of an attorney, was b. at Worcester, 1650; entered himself of the Middle Temple, and in 1674 was admitted a Commoner of Trinity College, Oxford; was called to the Bar, 1676, and commenced practice in London, 1682; one of the counsel for the seven bishops, 1688, at the Revolution, 1689, was a member of the first and chairman of the second of the committees which prepared the Declaration of Right; Solicitor-General, and knighted, May, 1689, Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, March 23, 1692, Attorney-General, May 2, 1692: made Lord Chancellor and raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Somers of Evesham, in the county of Gloucester, 1697; deprived of the Great Seal, April 17, 1700, impeached and acquitted, 1701. President of the Royal Society, 1702, President of the Council, 1708, and held this office till the recovery of the Cabinet of Harley and the Tories in 1710, d. of apoplexy, April 26, 1716.

As an author he is chiefly known by his following publications: 1. The Memorable Case of Denzil Onslow, Esq., tried at the Assizes in Surrey, July 20, 1681, touching his Election. 2. Brief History of the Succession of the Crown, 1681, again, 1714. 3. Just and Modest Vindication of the Proceedings [on the exclusion of the Duke of York] of the two Last Parliaments, 1681. First penned by Algernon Sidney; drawn out anew (ut supra) by Somers, finally corrected by Sir William Jones, M.P., (1566-1640) Pub in Baldwin's collection of pamphlets in the Reign of Charles II. 4. The Security of Englishmen's Lives, or, The Trust, Power, and Duty of the Grand Juries of England, &c., 1681; 1715, Edin., 1718, 8vo; Lon., 1765, (some 1766), 8vo. Notices of other publications of Somers will be found in Biog. Brit., Park's Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors; the Memoirs of his lordship; and several of the authorities cited below. He contributed poetical versions of Ovid's Epistles of Dido to Aeneas and of Aradne to Theseus, to Tonson's edition of Ovid's Epistles in English; and a translation of Plutarch's Life of Alcibiades to the English Plutarch by Various Hands, also published by Tonson. The poem entitled Dryden's Satire to his Muse (written early in 1682) is attributed to Somers, but challenged by Walpole. Many of his MSS, some original, were destroyed after his death by a fire in the Chambers of his relative, Mr. Charles Yorke, Solicitor-General.

To the eminent merits of this great man we had intended to adduce the testimonies of Addison, (Freeholder, May 14, 1714; May 4, 1716, and Dedication to Spectator, vol. i.) Swift, (Hist. of the Four Last Years of the Queen,) Bishop Burnet, (Hist. of his Own Times,) Walpole, (H. and N. Authors,) Sir J. Mackintosh, (Life, ii. ch. iii., and see his *Miscell. and Arranged by Walter Scott, Lon., 1809-15, 13 vols. r. 4to, £42. Dawson Turner, 1853, £15. B. Quaritch's Cat., 1868, 1140, £22 10s., 12821, £16 16s. There were 6 copies on thick paper. See Lockhart's Scott, ch. xix., (Scott received 1800 guineas for his trouble;) Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 2d ed., 293. These volumes, of which many of the originals were in his lordship's library, are known as the Somers Tracts. The first edition, in four sets of 4 vols. 4to each, was pub. by Cogan, 1748-52. A selection by R. Edwards, entitled A Collection of Scarce and Entertaining Tracts, &c., was pub. 1795, 4to. Scott's edition should be in every historical library: so should the Stuart Papers, (the publication of which was arrested by the death of Mr. Glover, Librarian to Queen Victoria, in 1860,) if they ever appear. A Life of Lord Somers worthy of the illustrious subject is yet to be written.

"Somerville has tried many modes of poetry; and, though perhaps he has not in any reached such excellence as to raise much envy, it may commonly be said at least that 'he writes very well for a gentleman.' Somerville, Mary, a daughter of Admiral Fairfax, of the British Navy, b. 1780, at Burntisland, Fifeshire, Scotland, and married first to Mr. Greig, (a British officer,) and subsequently to Dr. Somerville, first attracted notice by experiments on the magnetic influence of the violet rays of the solar spectrum, (see Lon. Quar. Rev., xlvii. 547, Edin. Rev., lix. 171,) and has since gained great and deserved reputation by the four following important works. 1. Mechanism of the Heavens, Lon., 1831, 8vo, Phila., 1832, 18mo. Elicited by the request of Lord Brougham that Mrs. Somerville would prepare for the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge a popular summary of the Mécanique Céleste of La Place. The MS. was submitted to Sir J. F. W. Herschel, who pronounced it a book for posterity, but above the class whose instruction was designed by Lord Brougham. It was therefore issued as an independent work. The demonstrations of La Place are adopted, modified, or superseded, according to the judgment of Mrs. Somerville. The Preliminary Dissertation (pp. 70) was subsequently expanded into No. 2.

"This unquestionably is one of the most remarkable works that female intellect ever produced, in any age or country, and, with respect to the present day, we hazard little in saying that Mrs. Somerville is the only individual of her sex in the world who could have written it."—Edin. Rev., April, 1832, 1-25.

How the reviewer arrived at the last item of information with which he favours us, we are not advised. An exhaustive and impartial investigation could alone justify such a conclusion.

This admirable woman, now in her eighty-ninth year, who has been singularly distinguished throughout her long life by the highest attainments in physical science, and has written admirable works on physical geography, and is even at this hour occupied in solving abstruse mathematical problems."

Sotheby, William, the eldest son of Colonel Sotheby, of the Guards, was b. in London, 1757, and educated at Harrow School; at the age of 17 became an officer of the 10th Dragoons; married Miss Mary Steel, of Eton, 2178

and quitted the army, in 1780, and purchased Revis Mount, near Southampton, where he resided for the next ten years; in 1783, with his brother, Admiral Sotheby, made a pedestrian tour through Wales, of which he published a poetical description, (No. 1, infra;) in 1791 removed to London, where and at Fair Mead Lodge, Epping Forest, (of which he was one of the master-keepers,) he chiefly resided until his death, Dec. 30, 1833. He was a gentleman of good family, large fortune, and pleasing address, and "given to hospitality;" therefore, of course, —having nothing to ask and much to bestow,—a general favourite in society. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Antiquarian Society, and of the Dilettanti Society, and one of the Council of the Literary Fund, of which he was an early and warm supporter. A very meagre notice of this amiable man, able translator, and elegant (not great) poet was inserted in the Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1834, 559. A prominent man of letters for so many years, we should suppose his correspondence to be well worth publication. 1. Wieland was much pleased with the accuracy and spirit of this translation, the publication of which caused John Quincy Adams to withhold his version (vide p. 36, supra) from the world. "If this be not the most perfect translation of a classic poet now extant in our language, it assuredly is capable of being advanced to that high distinction"—LORD JEFFREY, Edin. Rev., July, 1804, 303.

"It was not till lately that Mr. Sotheby combined the excellencies without the defects of his predecessors, and gave us so perfect a specimen of translation that those who can relish it have little reason to regret their want of acquaintance with the original"—Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1808, 71.

"Sotheby's Georgics stamped him the best translator in Christendom. That was, in my opinion, a more difficult achievement than an equally admirable translation of the Iliad. I have read his Specimens, [No. 19, infra], and in an early Number—perhaps the next—intend to sift them thoroughly, comparing all the fine or difficult passages in the original, with Pope, Hobbes, Chapman, Cowper, and my friend Mr. Sotheby, who will probably be found, in the whole, to have excelled all his predecessors in this great task"—PROF. JOHN WILSON, Noctes Ambros., No. XLVIII.: Blackw. Mag., April, 1830, 686. See No. 20, 21, infra.

Another highly favourable review of this translation, with copious extracts, will be found in Lon. Month. Rev., May, 1831, 96-116; see, also, Oct. 1810, 146, June, 1830, 225. Mr. Sotheby republished the Georgics in No. 17, infra; and they have been published together with the Eclologues by Wrangham and the Æneid by Dryden in 2 vols. 18mo. 7. Julian and Agnes; or, The Monks of the Great St. Bernard; a Tragedy, 1801, 8vo. Acted at Drury Lane, April 25, 1800. A "touching scene" which occurred on the first representation had any thing but a tragic effect.

"In the course of its performance, Mrs Siddons, as the heroine, had to make her exit from the scene with an infant in her arms. Having to retire precipitately, she inadvertently struck the baby's head violently against a door-post. Happily the little thing was made of wood, so that her doll's accident only produced a general laugh, in which the actress herself joined heartily."

This was a heavy "blow" to the tragedy: after such a mischance, Maoready's Lear or Fanny Kemble's Mrs. Haller could not have drawn a single tear from that audience. To the poor author the sight of a baby must have long been distasteful.

Professor Wilson (vide No. 6, supra) devoted to this translation five critiques published in Blackwood's Magazine, as follows: I. April, 1831, 668-88; II. May, 1831, 829-66, III July, 1831, 93-125, IV. Dec. 1831, 847-99, V. Feb. 1832, 145-80. These were repub. in the collective edition of Wilson's Works, viii., (iv. of the Essays), 1857, 1-295; pp. 296-389 of this series (Homer and his Translators) are occupied by a reprint of Wilson's two critiques (Blackw Mag., Jan. 1834, 1-26, Feb. 1834, 153-82) on the Odyssey, (vide No. 21, infra.) He promised a third critique, but it never appeared; and the promise is not reprinted in the volume just referred to. What he thought of Sotheby's abilities as a translator of Homer is thus briefly summed up in advance of his detailed examination:

"Let it at once suffice for Mr Sotheby's satisfaction that we say he is entitled—and we do not know another person of whom we could safely say as much—to deal with that well-booted Grecian, even at this time of day, after all that has been done to, in, with, and by 'Him of the Iliad and the Odyssey,' by not a few of our prevailing poets"—Critique I, Blackw Mag., April, 1831, 669, and in Wilson's Works, viii. 4.

21. The Iliad and Odyssey of Homer; translated into English Verse, 1834, 4 vols. 8vo. 75 designs of Flaxman. (See FLAXMAN, JOHN.) See No. 20. We have already intimated that Sotheby (as has been said of Dr. Johnson in another sense) was greater in other men's books than in his own—an admirable translator, but with slender claims to original genius:

"Sotheby was never great," remarks Mr. Molt, "except when treading in some beaten path. His 'Saul,' an epic poem, and his 'Constance de Castile,' a romance in the manner of Scott, as well as his 'Italy,' a descriptive poem, contain each fine and spirited passages, but even these are almost always reflections of what has attracted his own particular admiration in others."—Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century, Lect. I.

Byron said of Sotheby that he imitated everybody, and occasionally surpassed his models. Allan Cunningham (Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit., &c.) allows him "merit as an original writer." His Address on the Character of Sir H. C. Englefield was published in Lon. Gent. Mag., May, 1822, 418-20; see, also, ENGLEFIELD, SIR HENRY CHARLES, M.P. Notices of Sotheby will be found in Lockhart's Scott, ch. xv., Southey's Life and Correspond., ch. x.; T. Moore's Memoirs, and Blackw. Mag., xlviii. 363, and a letter of his to Bishop Percy has been recently published in Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii., 1858, 324.

His improved edition was published under the title of Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu, Opus inchoatum a R. P. Petro Ribadeneira, et productum ad Annum 1609; continuatum a Philippo Alegambe ad Annum 1643; recognitum et productum ad Annum 1675, a Nathanelo Sotwello, Rome, 1676, fol. This is of course the best edition of this collection; but Alegambe's, so far as it goes, is said to be more correct. The work was continued by Oudin, who commenced his labours in 1733, to great satisfaction. Southwell died in Rome, in 1676. See Antonio, *Bibl. South, Robert, D.D., the son of a London merchant, was b. at Hackney, Middlesex, 1638; in 1648 was a king's scholar, under Dr. Busby, at Westminster, and on the day of the execution of Charles I., (Jan. 30, 1649,) in leading the devotions of the school, prayed for his majesty by name; in 1651 was admitted a student of Christ Church, Oxford, and graduated B.A., 1655; ordained by a deprived bishop, 1658; Public Orator of the University of Oxford, 1660; chaplain to Lord-Chancellor Clarendon, 1661; Preb. of Westminster, and D.D., 1663; chaplain to James, Duke of York, 1667; Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, 1670; chaplain to Laurence Hyde, (afterwards Earl of Rochester,) Ambassador-Extraordinary to Poland, 1677; Rector of Islip, Oxfordshire, 1678; d. 1716. He was equally distinguished for learning, wit, loyalty, pecuniary generosity, personal disinterestedness, and theological and political intolerance. To his controversy with Sherlock, and the war of pamphlets by which it was carried on, we have already sufficiently referred, (SHERLOCK, WILLIAM, D.D., No. 5.) The year after his death, (i.e. in 1717,) a volume containing his Posthumous Works,—three of his sermons, his Will, Latin poems, and orations delivered while Public Orator of the University of Oxford,—with Memoirs of his Life, were published in an octavo volume. His Musica Inocentans, &c. appeared 1667, 4to. He also published a number of single sermons, 1660-66, Assize Sermons, 1660, (again, 1668,) 4to, and a collective edition of his Sermons, in 6 vols. 8vo, in 1692, &c.; again, 1697, &c., 3d ed., 1704; also in 1715, in 1722, and in 1727. To these were added, in 1744, 5 vols. 8vo. These 11 vols., with the three sermons and the Memoirs of his Life in the vol. of Posthumous Works, were republished at Oxford (Clarendon Press) in 1823, 7 vols. 8vo; again, 1842, 5 vols. 8vo. Another ed. was published Edin., 1843, 2 vols. r. 8vo; another by Tegg, London, 1843, (also 1845,) 4 vols. 8vo; another by H. G. Bohn, 1844, (also 1845, '46, '50, and '55,) 2 vols. (also in 8 Pts.) r. 8vo, another in Philadelphia, 4 vols. in 2 vols. 8vo; another in New York, 4 vols. 8vo. Sermons preached upon Several Occasions, ed. by Rev. W. G. T. Shedd, D.D., N. A Selection from the Writings of Robert South, D.D.*; with a Memoir, Lon., 1867, cr. 8vo. One of the most famous of his sermons,—Adam in Paradise,—with an Analysis and Preface by Basil Montagu, Esq., was published Lon., 1860, 18mo.

"The English language affords no higher specimen of its richness and strength than is to be found in this beautiful discourse. Every student for the Pulpit or the Bar should read this eloquent Sermon"—BASIL MONTAGU Preface.

This sermon is also republished (with a preface) in Fish's Master-Pieces of Pulpit Eloquence, N York, 1857, 1. 284-98.

"There is a curious sermon on the state of Adam in Paradise: it displays a most lively imagination, and contains some new and pleasing thoughts. Parts may be considered beautiful, but they are not adapted for selection: they are almost buried in the rubbish of bad metaphysics and puerile conceits"—Lon. Retrospec. Rev., ix, 1824, 299

Nor should we omit to notice The Beauties of Dr. South: consisting of Extracts from his Works, Lon., 1795, 8vo. See, also, BROOME, REV. ARTHUR. A vol. of Maxims, &c., Extracted from his Writings, appeared 1717, 8vo; one of his pieces will be found in Tracts of Angl. Fathers, iii. 335; and several of his compositions are republished in Wordsworth's Christian Institutes, i. 643, iii. 418, iv. 3.

When we look around us at the opinions of distinguished critics respecting the merits of this "learned but ill-natured divine," as Bishop Burnet (Hist. of My Own Times, Year 1698) justly styles him, we are oppressed by the embarras de richesses: a few citations, however, must be made.

"South is one of the best, if you except his peculiarities, and his violence, and sometimes coarseness, of language"—DR. JOHNSON. Boswell's Life of Johnson, ch. lxiii. See, also, ch. xliii.

"Sharp wit, keen satire, characterize his volumes"—DR. DODDRIDGE.

"Wit was his talent; yet he often reaches sublimity. He is, however, one of those authors who, in some respects, are to be admired and not imitated. To excite a laugh from the pulpit is to inspire the hearer with a levity of temper ill adapted to the indulgence of devotional feelings"—DR. KNOX.

"The spirit of South was embittered against Dissenters"—E. BICKERSTETH.

"Buy them forthwith: for they will delight the very cockles of thy heart."—ROBERT SOUTHAM Life and Correspondence, ch. xxxi. See, also, chaps. xix. and xxi.

"South had great qualifications for that popularity which attends the pulpit, and his manner was at that time original. Not diffuse, not learned, not formal in argument like Barrow, with a more natural structure of sentences, a more pointed, though by no means a more fair and satisfactory, turn of reasoning, with a style clear and English, free from all pedantry, but abounding with those colloquial novelties of idiom which, though now become vulgar and offensive, the age of Charles II. affected, sparing no personal or temporary sarcasm; but if he seems for a moment to tread on the verge of buffoonery, recovering himself by some stroke of vigorous sense and language, such was the witty Dr. South, whom the courtiers delighted to hear."—HALLAM. Lit. Hist. of Europe, lii., Pt. 4, ch. ii., sec. 56. See, also, sec. 28.

"Nor can the ingenuity, the subtlety, the brilliancy of South, though too exuberant in point, and drawing away the attention from the subject to the epigrammatic diction, be regarded otherwise than as proofs of the highest order of intellect"—LORD BROTHAM: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1866, i. 128. See, also, 113.

"Of all the English preachers, South seems to us to furnish, in point of style, the truest specimens of the most effective spe-ness of pulpit eloquence. . . . His style is . . . everywhere direct, condensed, pungent. His sermons are well worthy of frequent and diligent perusal by every young preacher."—HANNA ROBERTS Edin. Rev., lxiii, 82.

"Forced coilets, unnatural metaphors, absurd similes, turgid and verbose language, occasionally disfigure the pages of South. But we will, as usual, charge these faults on the times in which he lived, and attribute to his own good sense and ingenuity the numerous beauties he possesses. . . . South's sermons are adapted to all readers and all days."—Lon. Retrospect. Rev., ix, 291-303, (q v).

Southcomb, Lewis. Five single sermons, 1692-1752.

Southcott, Joanna, a silly, ignorant enthusiast or designing impostor, as opinions vary, was b. in Devonshire about 1750, and for a long time gained her living honestly and respectably as a domestic servant; commenced prophesying about 1792: professed to lay in of the Shiloh, Oct. 19, 1814, at 12 P.M., (having then, it is asserted, 100,000 followers,) d., probably of the dropsy that aided her delusions, Dec. 27, 1814. Her resurrection was long looked for; and as late as 1851 there were in England four small congregations of her disciples, nor were believers extinct in 1866. Her history, we are happy to say, does not enter into the plan of our work: we cannot, however, entirely exclude from a Dictionary of Authors one who put forth nearly sixty publications, (London, Stourbridge, Leeds, 1792-1814,) declarative, expositive, or prophetic. Among the best-known of these are. 1. The Strange Effects of Faith, with Remarkable Prophecies, 6 8vo Pts., Exeter, 1801-2.

"As for Joanna, though tolerably well versed in the history of human credulity, I have never seen any thing so disgraceful to common sense as her precious publications."—ROBERT SOUTHEY Letter to J. Rickman, March 15, 1806. Southey's Life and Correspond., ch. xii.

Perhaps the most complete collection of her publications extant (nearly 60 pieces, 1792-1814, bound in 6 vols. 8vo) was recently offered for sale (£3 10s.) by John Camden Hotten, the London antiquary and bookseller. A few are recorded in Watt's Bibl. Brit. A lady named Essam left a large sum of money for printing and publishing "The Sacred Writings of Joanna Southcott;" a niece of the testatrix disputed the bequest, on the ground that the writings in question are not sacred, but blasphemous; but the English Court of Chancery in 1862 sustained the will. Southerne, Edmund. Treatise concerning the Right Use and Ordering of Bees, Lon., 1593, 4to.

Southerne, or Southern, Thomas, b. at Oxmantown, co. of Dublin, 1660, was admitted a student of Trinity College, Dublin, 1676, entered the Middle Temple, London, 1678, but cultivated dramatic literature in preference to law, and became a popular writer of plays; served a short time in the army, where he attained the rank of captain, and after his retirement continued his literary pursuits,—which were successful both in point of profit (by one play he cleared £700) and as an introduction to the best company (Dryden, Pope, Gray, &c.) of his day. He is said to have died "the oldest and the richest of his dramatic brethren." This would make him neither a Methuselah nor a Croesus. He died May 26, 1746, in his 86th year. A collection of his plays was published Lon., 1713, 2 vols. 12mo; again, 1721, 2 vols. 12mo; and a better one, under the following title, Plays written by Thomas Southern, Esq., now first collected, with an Account of the Life and Writings of the Author, 1774, 3 vols. 12mo. The only two of his plays now known to the public are the ones thus commented on by Mr. Hallam:

"Southern's Discovery, latterly represented under the name of Isabella, is almost as familiar to the lovers of our theatre as Venice Preserved itself; and for the same reason, that whenever an actress of great tragic powers arises, the part of Isabella is as fitted to exhibit them as that of Belvidera. The choice and conduct of the story are, however, Southern's chief merits; for there is little vigour in the language, though it is natural, and free from the usual faults of his age. A similar character may be given to his other tragedy, Oroonoko, in which Southern deserves the praise of having first of any English writer denounced the traffic in slaves and the cruelties of their West Indian bondage. The moral feeling is high in this tragedy, and it has sometimes been acted with a certain success, but the execution is not that of a superior dramatist."—Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii, Pt. 4, ch. vi sec. xlv.

"Mr. Gray," says Mason, "always thought highly of his pathetic powers, at the same time that he blamed his ill taste for mixing them so injudiciously with farce, in order to produce that monstrous species of composition called Tragi-Comedy."

In his latter days Southerne regretted that he had so far yielded to this dramatic vice of the age.

Southey, Caroline Anne, (neither "the sister" nor "the daughter," and not proved to be even a relative, "of the Rev. William Lisle Bowles,") only child of Captain Charles Bowles, and niece of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Harry Burrard, was b. December 6, 1787, at her father's house, Buckland, Hants, and resided at this place all her life, excepting the period from her marriage with Robert Southey in 1839 until his death in 1843. She died July 20, 1854. For more than twenty years her writings were published without her name, (many were contributed to Blackwood's Magazine, under the signature of C.; see Index to Blackw. Mag., vols. i.-l., 1855, p. 63;) and it was not until 1820 that she collected any of these into volumes. The list of her works runs as follows: 1. Ellen Fitzarthur; a Metrical Tale, Lon., 1820, 12mo. Anon. Commended by Lon. Lit. Gas. Its publication was encouraged by Southey. See No. 2. 2. The Widow's Tale, and other Poems; by the author of Ellen Fitzarthur, 1822, 12mo. Anon. This and No. 1 were praised by Blackw. Mag., xi. 288, and Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvi. 402. 3. Solitary Hours, (Poems,) 1826, 12mo, 2d ed., 1839, fp. 8vo. Commended by Lon. Quar. Rev., and Lon. Lit. Gas., 1826, 371. 4. Chapters on Churchyards, 1829, 2 vols. fp. 8vo. 2d ed., 1841, fp. 8vo. These Chapters attracted much attention when first published in Blackw. Mag. She published no other prose work. 5. The Birth-Day; a Poem, in three Parts: to which are added Occasional Verses, Edin., 1836, fp. 8vo; again, Lon., 1849; new ed., 1854. Commended by Lon. Athen., 1836, 463, and Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvi. 408. 6. Tales of the Factories, fp. 8vo. 7. Robin Hood: a Fragment; by the late Robert Southey and Caroline Southey, with other Fragments and Poems by R. S. and C. S., 1847, 12mo. Noticed in Lon. Athen., 1847, 512. She also edited vol. i of The Life of the Rev. Andrew Bell, D.D., written by Robert Southey. vols. ii, and iii were written by the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Southey, (infra.) In the United States the writings of Mrs. Southey have long been popular; and there are American republications of several of her works. Chapters on Churchyards, N. Poets*, 327, and in other selections, (see, also, Liv. Age, xi. 230, and Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 485.) Obituary notices of Mrs. Southey appeared in Lon. After her husband's death she was placed on the Civil List for a pension of £200 per annum. She left many unpublished letters of Southey as a bequest to the poet's son-in-law and editor, the Rev. John Wood Warter, (see SOUTHEY, ROBERT, LL.D.)

"If Mrs. Norton is the Byron, Mrs. Southey (Caroline Bowles) is the Cowper, of our modern poetesses. She has much of that great writer's humour, fondness for rural life, melancholy pathos, and moral satire. She has also Cowper's pre-eminently English manner in diction and thought."—H. N. Southey, Robert, LL.D., whose earlier days have been briefly referred to on a preceding page, (see COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR,) was the son of a linen-draper of Bristol, where he was born, August 12, 1774; received his early education at Bristol, Corston, and (from 1788 to 1792) Westminster; was admitted to Balliol College, Oxford, Nov. 3, 1792, (his uncle, the Rev. Herbert Hill, intending him for the Church,) went up to reside, Jan. 1793, and left in 1794, in which year he published Wat Tyler, a Dramatic Poem, Lon., 12mo; was married to Miss Edith Fricker, of Bristol, Nov. 14, 1795, and on the same day started for Lisbon with his uncle, who was chaplain to the British Factory at that place; returned to Bristol in the summer of 1796; removed to London in February, 1797; entered himself a student of Gray's Inn, and commenced the study of law, which he soon, however, relinquished; again visited Lisbon, and after his return became, in 1801, private secretary to Mr. Corry, Chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland, resigned this office in a little over six months, and resolved to devote himself to literature, to which he had already made some published contributions, in 1804 established himself at Greta Hall, near Keswick, Cumberland, and there spent the remaining forty years of a most industrious life; lost his first wife, who had previously suffered for about three years under derangement, Nov. 16, 1837, married Caroline Anne Bowles, June 5, 1839, shortly afterwards sank into a state of mental imbecility, from which he never fully recovered, and died in his 69th year, March 21, 1843. In his youth he was for a short time "a liberal," both in politics and religion: his later opinions respecting Church and State were of a very different cast. In 1807 he received for literary services a pension, of which the clear receipts, £144 per annum, were appropriated to pay the premiums on his life insurance, (he had previously been indebted to his friend C. W. W. Wynn for £160 per annum,) on the death of Pye he was made Poet-Laureate, in 1821 he was honoured by the University of Oxford with the degree of LL.D.; in 1835, by the good offices of Sir Robert Peel, he was placed upon the Civil List for a pension of £300, having previously declined a baronetcy; he was also returned to Parliament for the borough of Downton, but refused to serve. The particulars of his life, expanded to great length in his voluminous correspondence, will be found in the volumes, hereafter to be noticed, published by his son and son-in-law, the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Southey and the Rev. John Wood Warter.

Greatly embarrassed for many years of his life by the res angusta domi, he was yet enabled by dint of strenuous exertion and provident foresight in his life insurance to leave to his heirs about £12,000, and a very valuable library, afterwards sold at auction in London see Fraser's Magazine, xxx. 87, Kerslake's Catalogue of Books, containing a Considerable Portion of the Library of the late Robert Southey, Bristol, (1845,) 8vo. That he did more than his share in filling the libraries of others, the following list of his publications (after Wat Tyler) is ample evidence.

1. With LOVELL, ROBERT, Poems by Bion and Moschus, Bristol, 1794, (some 1795,) 8vo.

2. Joan of Arc, an Epic Poem, 1796, 4to, 2d ed., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo, and some large vellum paper, 8vo; Lon., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo; Bost., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo, 3d ed., Lon., 1806, 2 vols. fp. 8vo, 4th ed., 1812, 2 vols. 12mo, 1815, 2 vols. 12mo, 1853, 12mo, with Minor Poems, 1857, 12mo; 1858, 12mo, 1866, 12mo.

"Madoc," exclaims the author, in 1795, whilst engaged in the composition of this poem, "is to be the pillar of my reputation." (Life and Correspond., ch. iii.) The "pillar" was rudely shaken by the Samson of the Edinburgh Reviewers, (see JEFFREY, FRANCIS, Lord, p. 960, supra), greatly to the disgust of the poet. The critic of the Annual Review (1805) commends Madoc highly. For other notices of it, see Lon. Month. Rev., 1805, Lon. Gent. Mag., ii. 353, n.; *Dibdin's Lib. Illustrations to, plates by Miss Newdegate, 3 Pts, 1848, &c. Reviewed by Lord Jeffrey in Edin. Rev., xxv. 1, (same art. in Analec Mag., vi. 177),—the only one of his many critiques on Southey republished by him in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1843, &c., (see *Blackw. Professor Wilson, in a letter to Hogg, recently published, declares it is Southey's "worst poem." On the contrary, Dr. Dibdin remarks.

"Roderick, or the Last of the Goths, is that which seems to have received his most careful elaboration and finish. It is a grand poem, and will, I predict with confidence, be the great favourite with posterity."—Lib. Comp., 745.

Mr. Moir also gives his judgment that "Of all Southey's great poems, 'Roderick' is assuredly the best, and must ever keep its place among the first-class productions of the age."—Poet. Lit., Lect. II.

This production, "written in a vein of ultra-Jacobinism in 1794, and now surreptitiously published," created no little excitement. William Smith, M.P., denounced it in the House of Commons, (see Speech of William Smith, M.P., on Wat Tyler, from the Times, 1817; and Proceedings in Court of Chancery, from the Times, 1817;) and Southey replied in—

"The best work on the subject. The favourite of my library, among many favourites the book I can read for the twentieth time, when I can read nothing else at all."—S. T. COLERIDGE

"To this work, and to the Life of R. Baxter, I was used to resort whenever sickness and languor made me feel the want of an old friend of whose company I could never be tired. How many and many an hour of self-oblivion do I owe to this Life of Wesley! and how often have I argued with it, questioned, remonstrated, been peevish, and asked pardon—then again listened, and cried, Right! Excellent! and in yet heavier hours treated it, as it were, to continue talking to me,—for that I heard and listened, and was soothed, though I could make no reply! Ah! that Robert Southey had fulfilled his intention of writing a History of the Monastic Orders,—or would become the Biographer at least of Loyola, Xavier, Dominic, and the other remarkable Founders."—S. T. COLERIDGE: note in his copy of vol. 1, pub. in 3d ed., 1846.

"The manner in which this most delightful of all books of biography has been received by the Wesleyan Methodists, demonstrates the justice of the main fault which judicious men charge against the work, viz. partiality towards the sect and its founder; a venial fault, indeed, the liability to which is almost a desirable qualification in a biographer."—S. T. COLERIDGE. Southey's Life of Wesley, 3d ed. 1846, l. 307, n.

Mr. H. B. Wallace, of Philadelphia, in an article in the Knickerbocker Magazine, N. York, in 1836, proved, by a careful comparison of vols i and ii. (all that had then reached America) of The Doctor with Southey's acknowledged works, that these were also his.

"The case was so strongly made out by Mr. Wallace that a pretty full abstract of this argument, which I sent to Mr. Southey, elicited a volunteer denial by him of not only the authorship itself, but of any knowledge of the author!"—Dr. R. Nor must the 10 volumes of Southey's Life and Correspondence and Selections from his Letters be unaccompanied by A Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Late William Taylor of Norwich, including his Correspondence, for Many Years, with the Late Robert Southey, Esq., and other Eminent Men; Compiled and Edited by J. W. Robbards, Esq., (q. v.,) 1843, (some 1844,) 2 vols. 8vo. We have not yet completed the register of Southey's published productions: in the Appendix to his Life and Correspondence by his Son we find enumerated 94 articles in The Quarterly Review, (Nos. 1-126, 1830-38,) 52 in the Annual Review, (vols. i.-iv., 1802-5,) and 3 in The Foreign Quarterly Review. He also wrote the historical part of The Edinburgh Annual Register for 1808-9-10, and a her papers for that work, and contributed to The Critical Review. See, also, WATSON, THOMAS, No. 14; WATTS, ISAAC, D.D., No. 1. Two of his articles in Quar. Rev., xlii. 215 (a review of G. Elliott's Life of Wellington) and 448, were published together in book-form as Summary of the Life of the Duke of Wellington, &c., Dublin, 1816, p. 4to.

Several years since there was announced, by Mr. Murray, "Southey's Essays on Biography, History, Voyages, and General Literature, being a Selection from Mr. Southey's Contributions to the Quarterly Review, Edited by his Son, the Rev. Charles C. Southey. It will form 3 vols. 8vo, uniform with the Essays of Macaulay and Sydney Smith." These volumes never appeared. Many of his unpublished MSS. were destroyed by his own hands.

SOUTHEY THE POET.

"Southey, among our living Poets, stands aloof and 'alone in his glory,' for he alone of them all has adventured to illustrate, in Poems of magnitude, the different characters, customs, and manners of nations. 'Joan of Arc' is an English and French story; 'Thalaba,' Arabian; 'Kehama,' Indian; 'Madoc,' Welsh and American; and 'Roderick,' Spanish and Moorish: nor would it be easy to say (setting aside the first, which was a very youthful work) in which of these noble Poems Mr. Southey has most successfully performed an achievement entirely beyond the power of any but the highest genius. . . . Of all his chief Poems the conception and the execution are original; in much, faulty and imperfect both; but bearing throughout the impress of original power, and breathing a moral charm in the midst of the wildest, and sometimes even extravagant, imaginings, that shall preserve them forever from oblivion, embalming them in the spirit of delight and of love."—PROFESSOR WILSON Recreations of Christopher North: An Hour's Talk about Poetry.

A later very eminent critic is incredulous as respects the non-oblivion:

"His poems, taken in the mass, stand far higher than his prose works. The Laureate Odes, indeed, among which the Vision of Judgment must be classed, are, for the most part, worse than Pyc's, and as bad as Gibber's, nor do we think him generally happy in short pieces. But his longer poems, though full of faults, are nevertheless very extraordinary productions. We doubt greatly whether they will be read fifty years hence, but that, if they are read, they will be admired, we have no doubt whatever."—LORD MACAULAY Edin. Rev., Jan 1830, 530, (Southey's Colloquies on Society), and in his Essays.

"Look at Mr. Southey's larger poems, his Kehama, his Thalaba, his Madoc, his Roderick. Who will deny the spirit, the scope, the splendid imagery, the hurried and startling interest that pervades them? Who will say that they are not sustained on actions wider than his own Glendower; that they are not the daring creations of a mind curbed by no law, tamed by no fear, that they are not rather like the traces than the waking dreams of genius, that they are not the very paradoxes of poetry? All this is very well, very intelligible, and very harmless, if we regard the rank effusions of Mr. Southey's poetry, like the red and blue flowers in corn, as the unweeded growth of a luxuriant and wandering fancy, or if we allow the yeast workings of an ardent spirit to ferment and boil over.—The variety, the boldness, the lively stimulus given to the mind may then atone for the violation of rules and the offences to law-giver authority, but not if our poetic libertine sets up for a legislator and judge, or an apprehender of vagrants in the regions either of taste or opinion. Our motley gentleman deserves the strait-waistcoat if he is for setting others in the stocks of servility or condemning them to the pillory for a new mode of rhyme or reason."—WILLIAM HAZLITT Spirit of the Age (Mr. Southey).

See, also, his Lectures on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VII.

"Southey,—who, with all his rich and varied accomplishments, has comparatively but a small portion of Wordsworth's genius, and whose 'wild and wondrous lays' are the very antithesis to Wordsworth's intense musings on humanity and new consecrations of familiar things," &c.—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD, Crit. and Miscell. Writings: (from New Month Mag.).

"Southey shone in the paths of gentle meditation and philosophic reflection, but his chief strength lay in description, where he had few equals. It was there that he revelled and rioted in the exuberant energy of his spirit,—a devoted worshipper of nature. Akinside describes a landscape as it affects the fancy; Cowper, as it impresses the feelings; Southey daguer-types the landscape itself, Coleridge descends on the waving of a leaf, &c.—they, on its colour and configuration; Wordsworth delights in outflowing sentiment, Southey, in picturesque outline. His capacious mind may be likened to a variegated continent, one region of which is damped with fogs, rough with rocks, barren and unprofitable, the other bright with glorious sunshine, valleys of rich luxuriance, and forests of perpetual verdure."—D. M. MORRIS Sketches of the Poet. Lit., &c., Lect. II.

"I should say that the predominant qualities of his poetry were picturesqueness, sweetness of sentiment, and purity of diction. . . . He is now my favorite. His miscellaneous poems are full of various excellence."—JUDAS J. BROWN, 1799. Life and Letters of Story, i. 80.

"Southey's Madoc, Don Roderick, and the Curse of Kehama are splendid metrical histories, but they do not contain the traits which speak at once to all mankind, they are addressed to the learned and studious, and these are a mere fragment of the human race. Admired, accordingly, by the well-informed, they are already comparatively unknown to the great body of readers; and the author's poetical fame rests chiefly on Thalaba, in which his brilliant imagination revelled without control, save that of high moral feeling, in the waterless deserts and palm-shaded fountains and patriarchal life of the Happy Arabia."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALBION: Hist. of Europe, 1815-1862, i. ch. v.

SOUTHEY THE PROSE WRITER.

"His prose is perfect. Of his poetry there are various opinions: there is, perhaps, too much for the present generation: posterity will probably select. He has passages equal to anything. At present he has a party, but no public,—except for his prose writings. The Life of Nelson is beautiful."—LORD BYRON: Journal, Nov. 22, 1818. Moore's Byron, i.

"Mr. Southey's prose style can scarcely be too much praised. It is plain, clear, pointed, familiar, perfectly modern in its texture, but with a grave and sparkling admixture of archaisms in its ornaments and occasional phraseology. He is the best and most natural prose writer of any poet of the day we mean that he is far better than Lord Byron, Mr. Wordsworth, or Mr. Coleridge, for instance."—WILLIAM HAZLITT, Spirit of the Age: (Mr. Southey).

See, also, his Table-Talk, Essay XXIV., (On the Prose Style of Poets.)

"The most powerful of modern writers."—DR. PHILLIPOTTE, Bishop of Exeter: Letter to Southey, Feb. 28, 1825. Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xxviii.

"Others, again, as Southey and Scott, blessed with a style at once perspicuous and picturesque, seem bent on counteracting these advantages by a rapidity of composition which sets at defiance every thing like arrangement, conciseness, or proportion."—WILLIAM H. PRASCOFT, the historian N. Amer. Rev., July, 1832, 192. (English Literature of the Nineteenth Century).

"In vigour and variety of genius Robert Southey has few equals. He ranks in poetry with the foremost, in criticism none can be named more sensible and accurate, in biography he is without rivals, while in history he occupies the first rank, and is on the right hand."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit., &c.

"He had not the patience of research and calmness of judgment indispensable for a trustworthy historian. His facts in many places will not bear investigation, he was credulous in the extreme, and gravely retailed statements on the authority of inflated chronicles which subsequent inquiry disproved and common sense at the moment might at once have discovered to be false."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALBION Hist. of Europe, 1815-1862, i. ch. v.

The next testimony to be adduced is that of a witness who knew Southey well; and it will be observed that it is highly creditable to the latter, both as an author and as a man:

"Reflect but on the variety and extent of his acquirements: he stands second to no man, either as a historian or as a bibliographer, and when I regard him as a popular essayist (for the articles of his composition in the reviews are for the greater part essays on subjects of deep or curious interest, rather than criticisms on particular works) I look in vain for any writer who has conveyed so much information, from so many and recondite sources, with so many just and original reflections, in a style so lively and poignant, yet so uniformly classical and perspicuous: no one, in short, who has combined so much wisdom with so much wit, so much truth and knowledge with so much life and fancy. His prose is always intelligible, and always entertaining. In poetry he has attempted almost every species of composition known before, and he has added new ones, and, if we except the highest lyric, (in which how few, how very few, even of the greatest minds, have been fortunate) he has attempted every species successfully. It is Southey's almost unexampled felicity to possess the best gifts of talent and genius, free from all their characteristic defects. As son, brother, husband, father, master, friend, he moves with firm yet light steps, alike unostentatious and alike exemplary. As writer, he has uniformly made his talents subservient to the best interests of humanity, of public virtue, and domestic piety, his cause has ever been the cause of pure religion and of liberty, of national independence and of national illumination."—SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE Biographia Literaria, ch. iii.

"An English worthily, doing his duty for fifty noble years of labour, day by day storing up learning, day by day working for scant wages, most charitable out of his small means, bravely faithful to the calling which he had chosen, refusing to turn from his path for popular praise or prince's favour.—I mean Robert Southey. We have left his old political landmarks miles and miles behind, we protest against his dogmatism, nay, we begin to forget it and his politics; but I hope his life will not be forgotten, for it is sublime in its simplicity, its energy, its honour, its affection! In the combat between Time and Thalaba, I suspect the former destroyer has conquered, Kehama's curse frightens very few readers now, but Southey's private letters are worth piles of epics, and are sure to last among us as long as kind hearts like to sympathise with goodness and purity and love and upright life."—THACKERAY: George the Third.

We should like to add to this, did our limits permit the gratification, Wordsworth's inscription for a tablet to the memory of Southey, to be placed in the church of Grosthwaite, near Keswick. A pleasing recognition of the literary services of Southey has occurred within the last few years: in 1861 Lord Palmerston placed on the Civil List for £100 the name of one of the daughters of the poet, historian, biographer, and critic whose long list of contributions to English letters we have thus fully recorded.

"I walked out with Wordsworth. We met with Dr. Arnold. We talked of Southey. Wordsworth spoke of him with great feeling and affection. He said, 'It is painful to see how completely dead Southey is become to all but books. He is amiable and obliging, but when he gets away from his books he seems restless, and as if out of his element. I therefore hardly see him for years together.' Now, all this I had myself observed. Rogers also had noticed it. With Wordsworth it was a subject of sorrow, not of reproach. Dr. Arnold said afterwards, 'What was said of Mr. Southey alarmed me. I could not help saying to myself, "Am I in danger of becoming like him? Shall I ever lose my interest in things, and retain an interest in books only?"' If," said Wordsworth, "I must lose my interest in one of them, I would rather give up books than men. Indeed, I am by my eyes compelled, in a great measure, to give up reading." Yet, with all this, Southey was an affectionate husband, and is a fond father. I find that his distaste for London is as strong nearly as his dislike to Paris. He says he does not wish to see it again!"—H. C. Robinson's Diary, &c., ed. Boston, 1870, ii. 274.

Southwell, Robert, an English Jesuit, b. 1560; in 1585 was appointed Prefect of the English Jesuits' College in Rome, was subsequently sent to England as a missionary, and, to the disgrace of the English government, suffered as a martyr at Tyburn, Feb. 21, 1595, after three years' imprisonment in the Tower, during which it is asserted he was ten times subjected to the torture. He was a good poet, a good prose writer, and a better Christian than his brutal persecutors. We like to call things by their right names. His poetical works were published under the title of Saint Peter's Complaint, with other Poems, Lon., 1595, 4to, (2d ed. same year,) and Mænonis; or, Certaine excellent Poems and Spirituall Hymnes, &c., 1595 4to, (of both of these ed-

Sparks, Jared, LL.D., b. about 1794, at Willington, Connecticut, in early life and under discouraging circumstances evinced that love of study and aptness in the acquisition of knowledge which in later years produced fruits truly honourable to himself and eminently beneficial to the world.

"On a late visit to Mansfield, Connecticut," remarks a traveler, "we formed a pleasant acquaintance with an old gentleman named Holt, formerly a school-teacher, who numbered among his pupils no less a personage than Jared Sparks, the distinguished biographer and historian. Mr Holt related to us a number of anecdotes and incidents of 'Jared,' as he termed his honoured pupil. He said 'Jared was an uncommonly fine boy,' and would learn more in one week than his other scholars would learn in three or four weeks. 'One night,' said he, 'at the dismissal of the school, I told Jared to remain with me after the others had gone. He did so, and, looking up to me with an inquiring glance, said, 'Master, what have I done?' 'Done? too much for me!' said the school-master. At this Jared became embarrassed, and begged an explanation. The good man then told him that he was getting too learned for his master, and recommended him to enter a higher institution. But the youth did not consent, and begged to remain a while longer."

Referring, for the particulars of his enterprising and successful career, to the authority to which we are indebted for the preceding anecdote, (National Portrait-Gallery of Distinguished Americans, edit 1854,) we present a brief biographical summary by stating that, after surmounting no ordinary difficulties, he graduated at Harvard College in 1815, subsequently taught for one year a private classical school at Lancaster, Massachusetts, and then returned to Harvard, to study divinity chiefly under the instruction of the Rev. Dr. Ware, at that time Hollis Professor, acted as editor of the North American Review, May, 1817, to March, 1818, inclusive, was ordained pastor of a new Unitarian church at Baltimore, Maryland, May, 1819, (see CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, D.D.), and resigned this post in consequence of failure of health, April, 1823, Chaplain to the House of Representatives at Washington, 1821; was the originator and chief writer of the Unitarian Miscellany and Christian Monitor, published by him at Baltimore for two years, (1821-23,) and afterwards continued for two more by Dr. F. W. P. Greenwood, sole proprietor and editor of the North American Review, January, 1824, to April, 1830, inclusive, McLean Professor of Ancient and Modern History at Harvard, 1838 to 1849, and President of the College, 1849 to February, 1853, when he resigned on account of ill health. The Corporation received "with great regret the letter of resignation," assuring him of their conviction "that the present prosperous condition of the college is, to a large extent, the result of the high tone of your influence and example, of the wisdom of the measures you have devised, and the extent of the reputation your character and attainments have secured." Testimonials of the same gratifying character were also received from the Faculty, being the board of immediate instruction and discipline, and the Faculty of the Law School.

After his resignation Dr. Sparks resided in retirement at Cambridge, devoting his studious hours to the preparation of A History of the American Revolution, to obtain original materials for which he visited Europe in 1853. This he did not live to see published: he died at Cambridge, March 14, 1866. Chronological list of his publications: 1. Letters on the Ministry, Ritual, and Doctrines of the Protestant Episcopal Church; addressed to the Rev. William E. Wyatt, D.D., in reply to a Sermon, Balt., 1820, 8vo, 2d ed., Bost., 1844, 12mo. Dr. Wyatt's Sermon was preached and published early in 1820. See PALFREY, JOHN GORHAM, D.D., No. 1. Brownson's Quar. Rev., i. 386; Chris. Disc., ii. 287. 2. Sermon preached in the Hall of the House of Representatives, March 3, 1822, on the Death of William Pinkney, Washington, 1822, 8vo, pp. 15, 2d ed., 1822. See, also, Chris. Disc., iv. 139. 3. An Inquiry into the Comparative Moral Tendency of the Trinitarian and Unitarian Doctrines, in a Series of Letters to the Rev. Dr. Miller, of Princeton, Bost., 1823, 8vo. Enlarged from the originals in The Unitarian Miscellany.

"Dr. Miller had published a sermon at Baltimore, which contained some remarks on Unitarians, that were thought to be unreasonably severe and unjust. Mr. Sparks made some strictures on the sermon, Dr. Miller replied, and out of the controversy sprang these Letters, the most elaborate and thoughtful of the writer's theological productions."—National Portrait-Gallery, ut supra.

4. A Collection of Essays and Tracts in Theology, from Various Authors. with Biographical and Critical Notices, 1823-26, 12 Pts in 6 vols 12mo. Suggested, the compiler informs us, by Bishop Richard Watson's Collection of Theological Tracts. Among the writers in Sparks's Collection are Turretin, Blackburne, Whitby, Bishops Hoadly and Hare, William Penn, Sir Isaac Newton, Robert Robinson, Emlyn, Sykes, Benson, John Hales, Locke, Watts, and Jeremy Taylor. See Chris. Exam., iii. 193; Chris. Disc., v. 74.

5. An Account of the Manuscript Papers of George Washington which were left by him at Mount Vernon with a Plan for their Publication, 1827, 8vo, pp. 24. In two Letters to Judge Story, dated at Mount Vernon, May 4 and 7, 1827. See No. 10.

6. Memoirs, &c. of Ledyard, &c., Camb., 1828, 8vo, 2d ed., 1829, (see, also, LEDYARD, JOHN;) in German, by Michaelis, Leipzig, 1829, 12mo.

7. The Diplomatic Correspondence of the American Revolution, being the Letters of Benjamin Franklin, Silas Deane, John Adams, John Jay, Arthur Lee, William Lee, Ralph Isard, François Dana, William Carmichael, Henry Laurens, John Laurens, M. Dumas, and others, concerning the Foreign Relations of the United States during the whole Revolution; together with the Letters in reply from the Secret Committee of Congress, and the Secretary of Foreign Affairs; also the entire Correspondence of the French Ministers Gerard and Luserne with Congress: Published, under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a Resolution of Congress of March 27, 1818, Bost., 1829-30, 12 vols. 8vo: re-dated, 1854.

"This is a work of great importance for the history of the Revolution. It is a store-house of new materials. . . . No library of American history can dispense with it, no American statesman can creditably remain ignorant of its contents. It is a great and important work, long called for and wanted, and at last ably prepared for the public."—EDWARD EVERETT. N. Amer. Rev., Oct 1831, 449-54.

8. The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge. vol. i., 1830, 12mo. This volume was edited (the astronomical matter was furnished by Professor Farrar) and the work was originated by Dr. Sparks. Its utility insured its success: we have now (1862) before us 33 volumes, and hope, if we can be as useful as the Almanac or its originator, to have in due season 33 more. P. S.—It was succeeded by The National Almanac and Annual Record, Phila., G. W. Childs, 1863, 16mo.

9. The Life of Gouverneur Morris, &c., 1832, 3 vols. 8vo: see MORRIS, GOUVERNEUR, and authorities there cited.

"A valuable addition to that class of biography which may be called the Historic."—Lon. Athen., 1833, 371.

10. The Writings of George Washington; being his Correspondence, Addresses, Messages, and other Papers, Official and Private, selected and published from the Original Manuscripts, with a Life of the Author, Notes, and Illustrations, 1834-37, 12 vols. 8vo; 1. p., imp. 8vo; re-dated, 1842, &c.

Vol. i., which contains the Life of Washington, was published (with vol. xii.) in 1837; reissued, for separate sale, 1839, '53, '54, '55. There is also an abridgment by the author in 1843, 2 vols. 12mo. Of vol. ii. of the Writings, the stereotype plates were sent to London, and an edition was issued there;

"but it met with no encouragement, and was in consequence abandoned, the price being returned to the purchasers, and the copies on hand, to use a publishers' term, wasted,—that is, mutilated and sold for waste-paper."—RICH. Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 259.

Mr. Colburn, of London, published in 1839, (re-dated 1842,) 2 vols. 8vo, what he called Personal Memoirs and Diaries of George Washington, Commander-in-Chief of the American Armies, and First President of the United States, by Jared Sparks. This was done without the consent, or even the knowledge, of Dr. Sparks, (see Lon. Month. Rev., Jan. 1839; N. Amer. Rev., July, 1842, 252, by J. G. Palfrey.) A French abridgment of the 12 vols. was published under the supervision of M. Guizot, as follows: Vie, Correspondance et Ecrits de Washington, publiés d'après l'Edition Américaine, et précédés d'une Introduction sur l'Influence et le Caractère de Washington dans la Révolution des Etats-Unis de l'Amérique; par M. Guizot, Membre de l'Institut, Paris, 1839-40, 6 vols. 8vo, and atlas in 4to. These volumes contain "a complete and literal translation of the Life of Washington, and those parts of the Correspondence which were deemed by M. Guizot most important and interesting to the French public." (See the review of them, by Edward Everett, in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1840, 69-91; and Dubl. Univ. Mag., xvii. 295.) Vie du Général Washington, par M. Guizot, was pub. separately, Paris, 1839, 8vo. See REEVE, HENRY, No. 2. A German version of the Life of Washington, and of extracts from the Writings, by Frederick von Raumer, was pub. at Leipzig, 1839, 2 vols. 8vo. For reviews and notices of Sparks's collection of the Writings of Washington, we refer to N. Amer. Rev., xxxix. 467, (by A. H. Gaz.*, 1852, 551, Ticknor's Life of Prescott, 1864, 355); MARSHALL, JOHN, LL.D., p. 1227. On the controversy with Lord Mahon it will be seen that we are sufficiently full. We are tempted, however, to extract from our memoranda of our conversations with Washington Irving a few lines on this question.

IRVING.—"Marshall and Sparks are very accurate. Whoever will read the Life by Marshall and Correspondence [Writings] by Sparks will have a good idea of Washington."

Allusion was made to the omissions and alterations in letters of Washington printed by Mr. Reed.

IRVING.—"I have examined them carefully, and found no important changes [See, to the same effect, Irving's Preface to his Life of Washington, written several years after this conversation.] The phraseology is slightly altered in some cases, and in one instance, I remember, I thought it was a great pity Washington says, 'I will have nothing to do with such a dirty fellow'; which exactly expresses his opinion of the man 'Dirty fellow' ought not to have been left out. People make a great mistake in representing Washington as flying into violent passions, and using such language as they repeat"—At Sunnyside, June 12, 1856.

See, also, Life and Letters of Irving, ii. 335, iv. 130, 146.

Candour compels us to admit that we should have retained every "dirty fellow" we found, even in such goodly company. The duties of the transcriber and of the glossologist appear to us to be entirely distinct: if they are to be confounded at will, all assurance is at an end, save to those who can examine original records.

We are not willing to conclude our notice of this most important publication without the quotation of a few lines from one of the eminent critics whose reviews of the Writings of Washington we have just cited:

"His reward has been already in part enjoyed; it must be found in the consciousness of laboriously and worthily performing a noble work,—in the conviction that he has contributed to give a wider diffusion and a more abiding permanence to the fame of Washington; and that, whenever the authority of the greatest and best of chieftains and patriots is appealed to in all coming time, it will be in some association with his own name and labours."—EDWARD EVERETT; N. Amer. Rev., xlvii. 381, (Oct. 1858.)

11. The Library of American Biography, Bost., 1834-38, (26 Lives,) 10 vols. 12mo; Second Series, 1844-47, (34 Lives,) 15 vols. 12mo. Some of the volumes, as also some of the sets, were re-dated from time to time. Of the sets before us, the date of the First Series is 1854; of the Second Series, 1848, (some sets of Second Series bear date 1852.) The sale of all the volumes to 1853 was stated to be 100,000. New editions, N. York and Bost.,

1864, 25 vols. 12mo. Of the 60 lives the following are from the pen of the editor of the whole work, Dr. Sparks: I. Ethan Allen; II. Benedict Arnold; III. Father Marquette; IV. De la Salle; V. Count Pulaski; VI. John Ribault; VII. Charles Lee; VIII. John Ledyard: (see No. 6.)

Notices of several of the volumes appeared in the N. Amer. Rev. as follows: of vol. i., xxxviii. 182, (G. Bancroft); 466, (by O. W. B. Peabody; see, also, Lon. Month. Rev., July, 1834, 895;) of vols. v., vi., xliii. 267, 516, (by J. G. Palfrey); of vol. x., xlviii. 63, (by J. H. Perkins); of vol. xi., lix. 96, (by O. W. B. Peabody); of vol. xiii., lx. 246; of vol. xxi., lxi. 217, (by Francis Bowen.)

From this last learned authority we extract a few lines: "Mr. Sparks's Library of American Biography, now extending to twenty-one volumes, is about the largest, as it is certainly one of the most valuable, of the collateral aids for the study of American history which have yet been published."

"It is to be regretted," justly remarks another excellent critic, "that the admirable series of American Biographies carried on so far and so well by Dr. Sparks was suspended."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN, Oct. 1, 1860.

Vol. i., containing Franklin's Autobiography, with Notes and a Continuation by Dr. Sparks, was issued separately, 1844, '56, '59. For notices of Sparks's Franklin, see *N. Amer. "A new edition of Franklin's works in a French translation, with which M. Laboulaye has been busied for some time, is nearly ready for the press. It is mainly based on Sparks's collection of B. F.'s writings. I believe that M. Laboulaye proposes to follow it with the writings of Washington."—Corresp. N. York Tribune, (Nov. 8, 1864), Paris, Oct. 14, 1864.

There has recently appeared The Autobiography of Dr. Benjamin Franklin The First and Only Complete Edition of Franklin's Memoirs; Printed from the Original MS., with Notes and an Introduction; Edited by the Hon. John Bigelow, late Minister of the United States to France, (with an engraving from the pastel portrait by Duplessis, in Mr. Bigelow's possession,) Phila., Lipincott, 1868, 8vo; 1 p., 100 copies, r. 8vo. In Italian, by Signor Pietro Rotondo, Firenze, 1869.

"It is well known that Franklin prepared so much of the celebrated Memoirs of his life as was originally intended for publication, mainly at the solicitation of one of his most cherished friends in France,—M. Le Veillard, then Mayor of Passy. Toward the close of the year 1789 he presented to this gentleman a copy of all this sketch that was then finished. At the Doctor's death, his papers, including the original of the manuscript, passed into the hands of one of his grandsons, William Temple Franklin, who undertook to prepare an edition of the life and writings of his grandfather for a publishing house in London.

"For the greater convenience of the printer in the preparation of this edition,—so goes the tradition in the Veillard family,—William Temple Franklin exchanged the original autograph with Mrs. Le Veillard, then a widow, for her copy of the Memoirs, and thus the autograph passed out of the Franklin family.

"At the death of the widow Le Veillard, this manuscript passed to her daughter, and at her death, in 1834, it became the property of her cousin, M. de Senarmont, whose grandson, M. P. de Senarmont, transferred it to me on the 26th of January, 1867, with several other memorials of Franklin, which had descended to him with the manuscript. Among the latter were the famous pastel portrait of Franklin by Duplessis, which he presented to M. Le Veillard; a number of letters to M. Le Veillard from Dr. Franklin, and from his grandsons, William Temple Franklin, and Benjamin Franklin Bache; together with a minute Outline of the topics of his Memoirs, brought down to the termination of his mission to France.

"I availed myself of my earliest leisure to subject the Memoirs to a careful collation with the edition which had appeared in London in 1817, and which was the first and only edition that ever purported to have been printed from the manuscript. The results of this collation revealed the curious fact that more than twelve hundred separate and distinct changes had been made in the text, and, what is more remarkable, that the last eight pages of the manuscript, which are second in value to no other eight pages of the work, were omitted entirely."—Introduction.

In October, 1869, the Trustees of the Boston Public Library announced their intention to form a special collection of the works of and relating to Franklin, large or small, printed or in MS.; also magazines, portraits, drawn, engraved, printed, or painted, broadsides, or any thing else, relating personally to the American sage. A very excellent design.

13. Remarks on American History, Bost., 1837, 8vo.
14. Illustrations of the Principal Events in the Life of Washington; Edited by Jared Sparks, r. 4to: No. 1, 1843.

"To be completed in twelve numbers, each embellished with four highly finished engravings, from original paintings by the most eminent American artists."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 375, year 1844.

"Some difficulty in procuring the engravings prevented the execution of his [the publisher's] plan. It was to be in 12 Nos. The first number only was published."—Jared Sparks to S. Austin Allabone, June 10, 1842.

15. Correspondence of the American Revolution; being Letters of Eminent Men to George Washington from the Time of his taking Command of the Army to the End of his Presidency; Edited from the Original Manuscripts, 1853, 8vo; 1 p., r. 8vo. These volumes contain a selection of about 1000 letters (from about 190 writers) from several thousands not used in the Notes and Appendix to the Writings of Washington, (No. 10, supra.) Of course the two collections must stand side by side on the shelf of the American historical library; and such should be in every American family at least. A review of No. 15 will be found in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1853, 80–105. The critic [J. G. Palfrey] assures us that "The volumes are prepared with the good judgment, good taste, and careful illustration which the public looks for in whatever passes through the hands of Mr. Sparks."

Dr Sparks also edited Professor Smyth's Lectures on Modern History, (see SMYTH, WILLIAM, No. 2,) and contributed (1817–62) fifty-two articles to the North American Review.

It would be easy to adduce further testimonies to the value of his publications and the diligence and intelligence of their author or editor; but for this purpose enough has been already quoted or cited. Spearman, Robert, of Oldacres, Northumberland, has been already referred to in our notice of his theological master: see HURCHINSON, JOHN. Of his own he published 1. An Enquiry after Philosophy and Theology, Edin., 1755, (some 1756,) 8vo; 2d ed., Dubl., 1757, 8vo. 2. Letters to a Friend concerning the Septuagint Translation and the Heathen Mythology, Edin., 1759, 8vo.

"Both these works contain a respectable portion of genius and learning, but are strongly tinged with the principles and spirit of the school to which the author belonged. Spearman's opinion of the Septuagint was low and incorrect, but he has some sensible remarks on the quotations from it in the New Testament. He considers all the mythology of the heathen to have been originally derived from Revelation."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 416.

Rev., 1820, i. 245, and Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 249. Malone's edition contains only a selection; Singer's is called the authentic edition of the original; and his 2d edition is "reprinted verbatim from his former edition," (see his Preface to ed. of 1859;) but, remarks the critic of the Athenæum, after a notice of some of the unremoved difficulties of his text,

"Enough has been proved to show that, instead of a 'verbatim' reprint, what was wanted was a carefully revised, collated, and annotated edition, and that Mr. Singer's neat and cheap, unhappy 'stops the way'."

"As I knew Mr. Joseph Spence, I do not think I should have been so much delighted as Dr. Kippis with reading his letters. He was a good-natured, harmless little soul, but more like a silver penny than a genius. It was a neat, fiddle-faddle bit of sterling, that had read good books and kept good company, but was too trifling for use, and only fit to please a child"—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. "To the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, [1866]"

"Sir: The paragraph which you lately published, on the authority of the American papers, that Prof Youmans recently left that country in order to present to Mr Herbert Spencer $6000 and a very valuable gold watch as a testimonial from his American admirers, requires some correction, as it misstates both the amount contributed and my own purpose in coming to this country. The case is this. Nearly all Mr. Spencer's writings have been republished in America, where they have been both widely read and very highly appreciated.

"Many of his friends there, feeling a deep indebtedness to him for works by which they knew he had been the loser to a serious amount, thought that they could not more suitably express their gratitude than by a substantial testimonial. But knowing that Mr. Spencer had decisively declined some overtures on the part of his friends in England, having the kindred purpose of preventing the cessation of his philosophical series, and preferring not to be placed in a like predicament, they invested 7000 dollars in his name in public securities, which, as they belong to no one else, he is of course at liberty either to appropriate or leave to accumulate for the benefit of his heirs."

"This admirable book, though it is confined to an illustration of the Ritual Law, yet it is by far the most considerable attempt yet made to explain the nature and genius of the Mosiac religion. It is of infinite use, not only for its appropriate excellence, but for the subjects, necessarily leading him to a very detailed account of the Ancient Pagan World, without which knowledge we can have but a very imperfect idea of the Jewish Law and History"—BISHOP WARBURTON.

Warburton defended Spenser against Witæius; for which Archbishop Magee, in his work on the Atonement, takes Warburton to task.

"It [Spencer De Legibus, &c.] is a very learned but a very dangerous work, the great object of which is to show that the Hebrew ritual was almost entirely borrowed from the Egyptians, and accommodated to the taste and prejudices which the Jews had acquired among that people. The same hypothesis had been stated by Maimonides, a philosophizing Jew, in his Morè Nerochim, and was greedily laid hold of by Sir John Marsham in his Canon Chronologicus Aegyptiacus. A masterly refutation of the work of Spencer was furnished by Witæius, in his Aegyptiaca; and Shuckford, in his Connections, supplies also many arguments on the same side"—ORRIS *Bibl. Dr. Woodward, in his Discourse on the Worship of the Egyptians, (see WOODWARD, JOHN, M.D., No. 8,) and William Jones of Nayland, in his Considerations of the Religious Worship of the Heathens, 1799, (see Jones's Works, xii.,) also attack Spenser; on whose behalf, on the other side, it has been alleged that "his chief purpose was to prove in detail that the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion were instituted in direct opposition to the practices of the surrounding idolatrous nations, and in order to establish the strongest distinction between the Jews and them." Sir John Marsham, it will be remembered, (p. 1229, supra), was attacked and defended on the same grounds.

* He [Spencer] preposterously deduced the rites of the Hebrews from the rites of the Heathens, and so produced a work of learned appearance and composed in elegant Latin, but disgraceful to Christian Divinity, dishonourable to the Church of England, and affording a very bad example to vain scholars who should succeed him"—JONES or NATLAND, ib. supra.

Spencer, Hon. William Robert, second son of Lord Charles Spencer, by the Hon. Mary Beauclerk, daughter of Lord Vere, and sister to Aubrey, fifth Duke of St. Alban's, b. 1770, and educated at Harrow and Oxford, became in early life a Commissioner of Stamps; resided for his last ten years in Paris, and d. there, 1834. He was the father of Bishops Aubrey, George Spencer, and George Trevor Spencer, already noticed as authors in this volume. For many years he was distinguished in England and (in his younger days) on the Continent as a man of fashion, a wit, and "the poet of society."

Spenser, Edmund, one of the three most eminent English poets, was b. in London in 1552 or 1553, (most probably the former,) and d. Jan. 16, 1598-9, at a lodging-house in King Street, Westminster. He was immediately descended from the Spensers of Hurstwood, Lancashire, and claimed kindred ("and had his claims allowed") with the family of Sir John Spenser of Althorp (See Mother Hubberds Tale: Phillis, Charyllis, and sweet Amaryllis,—the poet's kinswomen.) He was admitted a sizar of Pembroke Hall, May 20, 1569, became B.A. Jan. 16, 1573, M.A. June 26, 1576, and on leaving college paid a visit to his connections in Lancashire; found there a fair damsel, the "widow's daughter of the glenne," and, as in poetio-duty bound, immediately fell deeply in love, and celebrated his own devotion and the lady's charms under the orthodox names of Colin and Rosalinde. (See The Shepheardes Calendar, Eclogues April and June, and Colin Clouts Come Home Againe.) Who this lady was has been a fruitful subject of debate for more than two centuries, though the college friend of the swain, E. K., (Edmund Kirke?) who contributed the Introductory Epistle and the Notes to the Shepheardes Calendar, gives a broad hint in the remark that Rosalinde is a "feigned name, which, being well ordered, will bewray the very name of his love and mistress." According to a late American critic, Mr. Halpin, (see Atlantic Monthly, Boston, Nov. 1868, 877,) the proper "ordering" of Rosalinde is Rose Daniel, a sister of a historian and poet chronicled on a preceding page, (DANIEL, SAMUEL, p. 474,) who subsequently rejected "Colin" and became the wife of another of our family of authors, John Florio, the Resolute, (p. 608, supra.) The conduct of the disappointed suitor was worthy of the imitation of all fellow-sufferers: he did not suddenly awake to an affected consciousness of the real insignificance of those charms and virtues which had been wooed in vain, but, on the contrary, fourteen years later, (see his Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, supposed to have been written in 1591,) exalts her merits and attractions in the highest strains, and finds fault only with the ambition which prompted such unbecoming aspirations.

"Not then to her that scorned thing so base,
But to myselfe the blame that lookt so hie."

Of course he could never be consoled,—never think of another love:

"And ye, my fellow shepherds, which do see
And hear the langours of my too long lying,
Unto the world for ever witness bee,
That here I die, nought to the world denying
This simple trophie of her great conquest."

But—alas for lovers' vows!—in this same year, or the next, the poet met with a beautiful Irish girl, ("Elizabeth,") probably Miss Nagle, who, after a pursuit of two years, consented to be captured,—it would appear, not a moment too soon: but he shall tell his own story.

"Lyke as a huntsman after weary chace,
Seeing the game from him escapt away,
Sits downe to rest him in some shady place,
With panting hounds beguiled of their prey,
So, after long pursuit and vaine assay,
When I all weary had the chace forsooke,
The gentle deer returned the selfe-same way,
Thinking to quench her thirst at the next brooke.
There she, beholding me with mylder looke,
Sought not to flye, but fearless still did bide;
Till I in hand hei, yet halfe trembling, tooke,
And with her owne good will her fyrmyl tyde;
Strange thing, me seemd, to see a beast so wyld
So goodly wonne, with her owne will beguyl'd."

Sonnet 67: see, also, Sonnet 62 Amoretti, 1595.

Not so "strange" as he makes it: Irish girls of the sixteenth century seem to have been much like other girls of other centuries.

The bridegroom celebrated his nuptials with this lovely oeing in those magnificent strains which have made this event forever memorable in the chronicles of the marriages of poets:

"Spenser's Epithalamium on his own marriage, written perhaps in 1594," remarks an eminent critic, "is of a far higher mood than any thing we have named. It is a strain redolent of a bridegroom's joy and of a poet's fancy. The English language seems to expand itself with a copiousness unknown before, while he pours forth the varied imagery of this splendid little poem. I do not know any other nuptial song, ancient or modern, of equal beauty. It is an intoxication of ecstasy, ardent, noble, and pure."—HALLAM'S Lit. Hist. of Europe, Pt. 2, 1550-1600, 4th ed., 1864, ii. 127.

Mr. Collier, in his new edition of Spenser, (1862, ad infra), would have us believe that this was Spenser's second marriage (it occurred in 1595) since his rejection by Rosalinde; but we imagine that the verdict of the reader will be, "Not proven." It seemed proper—it was certainly pleasant—to accompany the poet through his courtships, contrasting the result of the first and (at least) the second of these enterprises: we must now return to an earlier period of his life.

In 1578, at the suggestion of Gabriel Harvey, with whom he had contracted a friendship at Pembroke Hall, (see HARVEY, GABRIEL, LL.D., No. 1,) Spenser came to London, where, by the good offices of the scholar who had invited him to the metropolis, he was introduced to Sir Philip Sidney, who presented him to the Earl of Leicester. Nine years before this, he had read his verses—not his name—in print.

In May, 1569, (in French, Lon., 1568, 8vo,) John Vander Noodt, a Flemish physician living in England, published a collection entitled A Theatre wherein be represented as well the Miseries and Calamities that follow the voluptuous Worldlings, as also the great Ioyes and Plesures which the Faithfull do enjoy, sm 8vo, pp. 276. Prefixed to the contents of this volume are 21 engravings on wood, being illustrations of the Visions of Petrarch and of Belay; and these are illustrated by metrical versions, called Epigrams and Sonnets, by Spenser, then about seventeen years of age. They are without his name, but appear, with alterations, in his Complaints, published in 1591.

Vander Noodt's volume is very rare: it is priced in the Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 779, £25; the same copy was sold at Midgeley's for £15 4s 6d., and Bindley's copy was sold for £22 1s. A copy in J. Lilly's Catalogue, Nov.-Dec. 1857, p. 83, is priced £10 10s. Since this juvenile essay he had, from time to time, employed his pen both in prose and poetry. A portion of these etchings were afterwards incorporated with the Faerie Queene, others—The Dying Pelicane, Stemmata Dudleiana, &c.—have been lost.

In 1579 (the year after his arrival in London) he published (anonymously) The Shepheardes Calendar, (ascribed by some of his contemporaries to Sir Philip Sidney;) in 1580 he became, through the influence of Sidney, Secretary to Lord Grey of Wilton, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and in 1586 received from the crown a grant of 3029 acres (including the castle and manor of Killoolman) in the county of Cork, forfeited by the Earl of Desmond. In 1588 he was appointed Clerk of the Council of Munster, and in the next year received from Sir Walter Raleigh the memorable visit to which we have already briefly alluded in our life of the latter, referring the reader, for fuller particulars, to Spenser's own charming narration in Colin Clouts Come Home Againe. When was a poet ungrateful for the timely appearance of a genial and appreciative auditor? Such a one—The Shepheard of the Ocean, as the poet styles him—now listened with delight to the noble verses of the Faerie Queene, of which Books I. and II. and almost all of Book III. were ready for the press. Raleigh thought this indeed "a dish to set before a Queen," and—for authors are not proverbially incredulous respecting the merits of their compositions—he encouraged the hopes of the minstrel, and took him with him to England. Let us quote Spenser's own version of this most interesting interview and its effects:

"One day (quoth he) I sat (as was my trade)
Under the foot of Mole, that mountain hore,
Keeping my sheepe amongst the cooly shade
Of the greene alders by the Mullaes shore;
There a strange shepheard chaunt to find me out;
Whether allured with my pipes delight,
Whose pleasing sound yhrilled far about,
Or thither led by chaunce, I know not right:
Whom, when I asked from what place he came,
And how he hight, himselfe he did ycleepe
The Shepheard of the Ocean by name,
And said he came far from the main-sea deepe.

"He, sitting me beside in that same shade,
Provoked me to plaie some pleasant ft;
And when he heard the musicke which I made,
He found himselfe full greatly pleased at it.

He me perswaded forth with him to fare:
Nought tooke I with me, but my caten quill;
Small needments also need shepheard to prepare
So to the sea we came."

He brings him before the Queen—the great Elizabeth (Cynthia) listens, and is charmed:

"The Shepherds of the Ocean (quoth he)
Unto that Goddess grace me first enhanced,
And to mine eaten pipe inclined her care,
That she thenceforth therein gan take delight,
And it desired at timely hours to heare,
All were my notes but rude and roughly sight.
For not by measure of her own great mynd
And wondrous worth, she mott my simple song,
But loy'd that country shepherde ought could fynd
Worth harkening to, smoght that leaured throng."
Colin Cloute Come Home Again.

The first three Books of the Faerie Queene were published in 1590, and the event was signalized by a royal grant of a pension of £50 per annum. From 1591 to 1595 he lived on his Irish estate, dividing his time between his acres, his Faerie Queene, and the more substantial Queen to whom, as we have seen, he was united by marriage in the last of the years above named. In 1595 he visited London for the purpose of attending to some business, the most agreeable part of which was the publication of Books IV., V., and VI. of his great poem, which were given to the world in 1596. The Shepherd was not entirely forgotten at court, and in September, 1598, by the influence of Elizabeth, Spenser was appointed Sheriff of the county of Cork. In the next month occurred what is called "the rebellion of the Earl of Tyrone," who,

"having dispersed the forces which were sent against him by the Earl of Ormond, ravaged and spoiled the whole county of Cork, so that Spenser was forced to seek his safety, together with his wife, in his native country, leaving his estate in Ireland to be plundered by the rebels, who, it is said, having carried off his goods, burnt his house and a [his] little child in it. However that be, it is certain he did not long survive this irretrievably ruinous calamity, which, reducing him to a state of absolute dependence, with the additional weight of a family, entirely broke his heart, and he languished under it until his death."

Thus, after this admirable Poet and worthy gentleman had struggled with poverty all his lifetime, he died in extreme indigence and want of bread. However, some amends was made to his fame at last, his corpse being interred in Westminster, near Chancer, as he had desired, and his obsequies attended by the Poets of that time, and others, who paid the last honours to his memory. Several copies of verses were thrown after him into his grave, and Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, who had married the widow of Sir Philip Sidney, was at the expense of the funeral. A handsome monument also, with an inscription, was erected in honour of him by Anne, Countess of Dorset—" Biog. Brit., 3810-12

This monument, erected in 1620, was, by the seal of Mason and some other admirers of genius, restored in 1778

Ben Jonson's assertion (reported by Drummond of Hawthornden) that Spenser "died for lacke of bread," and "refused twenty pieces sent to him by my lord of Essex, adding, He was 'sorry he had no time to spend them,'" has been confidently challenged by some of those sages who are always so much better informed respecting the events of preceding ages than those who lived and moved in them, but we are obliged by all rules of evidence, however unwillingly, to credit the testimony of Spenser's contemporaries that he died in poverty. The melancholy story of the day is pathetically recited in The Returne from Parnassus, or the Scourge of Simony, publicly acted by the Students of St. John's, Cambridge, London, 1606, 4to, (reprinted by Hawkins in his Origin of the English Drama)

"A swiften [sweeter] swan than ever sung in Po,
A shriller nightingale than ever blest
The prouder groves of self-adoring Rome;—
Blith was each valley, and each shepherd proud,
While he did chant his carol minstrelsie;
Attentive was full many a dainty Ear,
Which hung upon his melting tongue,
While sweetly of his Fairy Queen he sung,
While to the water's fall he tun'd for fame,
And on each bark engrav'd Eliza's name.
And yet, for all, the unregarding soile
Unlaxt the line of his desired life,
Denying maintenance for his dear reliefe;
Careless care to provide his exequire,
Scarce deigning to shut up his dying eye.
But softly may our honours ashes rest
That lie by merry Chancer's noble chest."

Shakespeare, also, who had written,
"Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such As passing all conceit, needs no defence," is presumed by some commentators to have referred to the "straitness of bread" in which the poet died, in the lines in Midsummer's Night Dream, Act V., Scene I.:

"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death Of learning, late deceas'd in beggary."

But, as the play is supposed to have been composed in 1594, about five years before Spenser's death, we agree with Mr. Knight in referring this couplet to the demise (1592) of Robert Greene.

"Poorly (poore man!) he lived; poorly (poore man!) he died," exclaims Phineas Fletcher, when lamenting the author of the Faerie Queene in his Purple Island.

Spencer left two sons,—Sylvanus and Peregrine: that his young and lovely widow, whose charms and virtues he had himself made so famous, should be sought and won, will surprise no one. She married Roger Seckerstone.

CHRONOLOGICAL CATALOGUE OF SPENSER'S WORKS.

1. The Shepherdes Calendar, containing twelve Æglogues proportionable to the twelve Monethes, Lon., 1579, 4to, (Earl of Charlemont, Sept. 1865, £31 10s.) 2d ed., 1581, 4to, (Sir M. M. In Latin, Calendarium Pastorale, &c., 1653, 8vo, (see BATHURST, THEOPHORE;) repub. by John Ball, with a Latin Dissertation, De Vita Spenseri et Scriptis, 1732, (some s. a.) 8vo, some l. p. Fanshawe, we have seen, praises Bathurst's Latin version; Professor Wilson (Blackw. Mag., xxxiv 834) declares that it is "bitter bad." John Dove, five or six years after the first publication of the Calendar, (he did not know the author,) translated it into Latin verse. "This Latin version," says Wilson, (ubi supra), "so far from rescuing the Calendar from the grave, fell into it with a rustle of manuscript. Mr. Todd says it is good" The MS still remains unpublished, and is, or formerly was, in the library of Caius College, Cambridge. We hope to find room for some opinions on The Shepherdes Calendar at a later stage of this article. For notices of Spenser's Letters to Harvey, published in 1580, see HARVEY, GABRIEL, LL D., No 1. Bibl. Anglo-Poet., No 344; Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man, 2479, (which also consult, 2476-79, for editions of Spenser's works.)

2 The Faerie Queene disposed into twelve Books, fashioning XII. Moral Vertues, 1590, 4to. Contains Books I, II., and III.; differs from the later editions.

The Second Part of the Faerie Queene; containing the fourth, fifth, and sixth Books, 1596, 4to. Two sets of both Parts are marked in Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 634, 635, at £9 9s. and £10 10s. Both Parts, 1590-1596: Earl of Charlemont, Aug. 1865, 160, £40 10s.; W N Lettsom, Nov. 1865, 112, £22 10s. Both Parts, known as second quarto edition, 1596, 2 vols. 4to. See Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 636. W N Lettsom, 113, £10; J Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, £15 15s. Faerie Queene, 1609, fol. J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, 122, £5 5s. Known as first folio edition. After the six Books appears, in this volume, the first edition of Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, which, both for forme and matter, appears to be parcel of some following Booke of the Faerie Queene, under the legend of Constance. Doubtless this was all that was written of the intended six additional Books of the Faerie Queene, which by some credulous persons are supposed to have been lost at sea, or to have perished by the fire at Kilcolman Castle in 1598. See Dekker's Knight's Conjuring, Collier's Bibl. Account of Early Eng. Lit., voc. Dekker, Thomas. The second folio edition of the Faerie Queene was published in the collective edition of Spenser's Works, 1611, fol., to be noticed hereafter; and later editions of the same poem appeared: With an Exact Collation of the two Original Editions, [1590, 1596,] &c., a New Life of the Author, [by Dr. Birch, and also a Glossary, &c., 1751, 3 vols. 4to, (J. Complete Works, with Life, Notes, and a Glossary, by John Payne Collier, Lon., Jan. 1862, 5 vols. 8vo, £3 15s.

"The Life of Spenser has received a more critical treatment than it has before met with. Many documents and authorities have been discovered which have only lately been capable of being adduced as evidence. . . Mr. Collier's reputation as an editor of Elizabethan classics is well sustained by the present publication. The text of Spenser has never before been carefully edited, as the text of every Elizabethan author should be edited, by collation of the early editions. . . By a faithful collation of every impression from the year 1579, when 'The Shepherd's Calendar' was first published, to the year 1679, Mr. Collier has been enabled to present to the reader the text of Spenser in as correct a form as conscientious criticism can procure for it"—Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 76.

Christopher North, who groaned so lugubriously over Todd's edition, exclaiming, about forty years since, (see Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1833, 824,) "There ought to be a new edition of Spenser—the most delightful of all Poets: but who is worthy to usher in the Apparition?" would doubtless have handled Collier's edition with peculiar gratification.

CRITICAL OPINIONS ON THE SHEPHERDS CALENDAR.

This series of poems was Entitled, to Noble and Virtuous Gentleman, most worthy of all titles, both of learning and chivalrie, Maister Philip Sidney.

Sir Philip remarks that Spenser

"hath much poetry in his eclogues, indeed worthy of the reading, if I be not deceived. That same framing of his style to an old rustic language, I dare not allow; since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazarus in Italian, did affect it."—Defences of Poets, 1595, 4to

"Theocritus is famed for his Idylls in Greek, and Virgil for his Eclogues in Latin; so Spenser, their imitator, in his Shepherd's Calendar, is renowned for the like argument, and honoured for fine poetical invention and most exquisite wit."—FRANCIS MERES: Wit's Treasure, 1597, 4to.

See, also, Webb's Discourse of English Poetrie, 1586

sto; Fraunce's Lawier's Logike, 1588, 4to; Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589, 4to.

"The Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language,—not even by Tasso's Amenita, which infinitely transcends Guarini's Pastor Fido, as having more of nature in it, and being most clear from the wretched affectation of learning. Spenser, being master of our northern dialect, and skilled in Chaucer's English, has so exactly imitated the Dorick of Theocritus, that his love is a perfect image of that passion which God infused into both sexes, before it was corrupted with the knowledge of arts and the ceremonies of what we call good manners."—DAYDEN

Pope, and Professor Wilson, who comments on the preceding opinion, (see Blackw. Mag., xxxiv. 830-34,) are not disposed to admit that Spenser is equal to Theocritus:

"His eclogues are somewhat too long, if we compare them with the ancients. He is sometimes too allegorical, and treats of matters of religion in a pastoral style, as the Mantuan had done before him. He has employed the lyric measure, which is contrary to the practice of the old poets. His stanza is not still the same, nor always well chosen. . . The addition Spenser has made of a Calendar to his Eclogues, is very beautiful, since by this, besides the general moral of innocence and simplicity, which is common to other authors of pastoral, he has one peculiar to himself: he compares human life to the several seasons, and at once exposes to his readers a view of the great and little worlds, in their various changes and aspects."—POPE A Discourse on Pastorals, 1704, prefixed to Pope's Pastorals

"Master Edmund Spenser had done enough for the immortality of his name had he only given us his Shepherd's Calendar, a master-piece, if any."—DAYTON Pref to his Pastorals

"Two great defects have contributed deeply to injure the popularity of his Calendar: the adoption of a language much too old and obsolete for the age in which it was written, and the too copious introduction of satire on ecclesiastical affairs."—DR DRAKE Shakep and his Times, i. 646

"The shepherds of Spenser's 'Calendar' are parsons in disguise, who converse about heathen divinities and points of Christian theology. Palinode defends the luxuries of the Catholic clergy, and Piers extols the purity of Archbishop Grindal, concluding with the story of a fox, who came to the house of a goat in the character of a pedlar, and obtained admittance by pretending to be a sheep. This may be burlesquing Æsop, but certainly is not imitating Theocritus. There are fine thoughts and images in the 'Calendar,' but, on the whole, the obscurity of those pastorals is rather their covering, than their principal defect."—CAMPELL Springs of Eng. Poet

"Neither the Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser nor the Pastorals of Gay possess that native simplicity and close adherence to the manners and language of country life, which ought to form the basis of this kind of composition."—WILLIAM ROSKOE: Life of Lorenzo de' Medici, i.

"The dialect of Theocritus is musical to our ears, and free from vulgarity,—praises which we cannot bestow on the uncouth provincial rusticity of Spenser. He has been less justly censured on another account for intermingling allusions to the political history and religious differences of his own time. . . If Spenser has erred in the allegorical part of his pastorals, he has done so in company with most of those who have tuned the shepherd's pipe."—ITALIAN: Lat Hist of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, ii. 123-24. See, also, 210.

"To our minds, the irredeemable sin of the Shepherd's Calendar—we wish we could use gentler words, but cannot find them—is the cold, uncomfortable, and unhappy air that hangs in it over almost the whole of rural life, we are always wishing for the sun, but no sun shows his face. Nature is starved, and life hungry, and sleep seems but the relief from labour. There is nowhere joy."—PROFESSOR WILSON Blackw. Mag., xxiv. 832.

CRITICAL OPINIONS ON THE FAERIE QUEENE.

The design of this great epic is carefully set forth by The author, who assures us that "The general end therefore of all the Booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline.

In which I haue followed all the antique poets historicall, first Homere, who in the persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good gouernour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odyssees; then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Æneas; after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando, and lately Tasso disseuered them again, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a priuate man, coloured in his Rinaldo, the other named Politice in his Godfredo. By ensample of which excellent poets, I labour to pourtraine in Arthur, before he was king, the image of a braue Knight, perfected in the twelue priuate Morall Vertues, as Aristotle hath deuised; the which is the purpose of these first twelue bookes; which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged to frame the other part of Politicke Vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king."

Books I, II., and III. treat—

"The first of the Knight of the Redcrosse, in which I express Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whom I sette forth Temperance: The third of Britomartis, a Lady Knight, in whom I picture Chastity."

He continues:

"But, because the beginning of the whole Worke seemeth abrupte, and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that we know the occasion of these three knights' seuerall Adventures. For the methode of a poet historicall is not such, as of an histo-riographer. For an historiographer discourseth of allmyres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions, but a poet thrusteth into the middist, even where it most concerneth him, and there recouring to the things forepast, and diuining of things to come, maketh a pleasing analysis of all. The beginning therefore of my History, if it were to be told by an historiographer, should be the Twelfth Booke, which is the last." See Spenser's Letter to Sir Walter Raleigh, prefixed to First Three Books, 1590, 4to.

Alas that this magnificent outline was never filled up! for, as we have seen, we have only Six Books and a fragment of a Seventh. Had the author reached and completed the Twelfth Book,

"The reader would have been agreeably surprised when he came to discover that the series of adventures which he had just seen completed were undertaken at the command of the Faery Queen, and the Knights had severally set forward to the execution of them from her annual birthday festival."—THOMAS WATSON: Observations on the Faerie Queene of Spenser, 1764, 8vo. &c.

"The poet supposes that the Faery Queen, according to an established annual custom, held a magnificent feast, which continued twelve days, on each of which respectively twelve several complaints are presented before her. To redress the injuries which were the occasion of these several complaints, she dispatches, with proper commissions, twelve different knights, each of which, in the particular adventure allotted to him, proves an example of some particular virtue, as of Holiness, Temperance, Justice, Chastity, and has one complete book assigned to him, of which he is the hero. But besides these twelve knights, severally exemplifying twelve moral virtues, the Poet has constituted one principal knight or general hero,—Prince Arthur,—who represents, as we have seen, Magnificence, the perfection of all the rest. He, moreover, assists in every book, and at the end of his actions is to discover and win Gloriana, or Glory."—PROFESSOR WILSON Blackw. Mag., xxxvi. 411.

Having thus presented the design and plan of the Faerie Queene, we proceed to quote the opinions of a number of eminent critics respecting the merits of the poem, or series of poems.

"[In Epic poetry] the English have only to boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted either genius or learning to have been perfect poets, and yet both of them are liable to many censures. For there is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action; he raises up a hero for every one of his adventures, and endows each of them with some particular moral virtue which renders them all equal, without subordination or preference. Every one is most valiant in his own legend, only we must do him that justice to observe that magnanimity, which is the character of Prince Arthur, shines throughout the whole poem, and succours the rest when they are in distress. The original of every knight was then living in the court of Queen Elizabeth; and he attributed to each of them that virtue which he thought was most conspicuous in them,—an ingenious piece of flattery, though it turned not much to his account. Had he lived to finish his poem, in the six remaining legends, it had certainly been more of a piece, but could not have been perfect, because the model was not true. But Prince Arthur, or his chief patron, Sir Philip Sidney, whom he intended to make happy by the marriage of his Gloriana, dying before him, deprived the poet both of means and spirit to accomplish his design. For the rest, his obsolete language and the ill choice of his stanza are faults but of the second magnitude, for, notwithstanding the first, he is still intelligible, at least after a little practice, and for the last, he is the more to be admired that, labouring under such a difficulty, his verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans, and only Mr. Waller among the English."—DAYDEN Preface to the trans. of Juvenal, 1693, fol.

"Milton has acknowledged to me that Spenser was his original."—DAYDEN Preface to his Poems. See, also, Edin. Rev., xxvi. 7.

"The religion of the Gentiles had been woven into the con texture of all the ancient poetry with an agreeable mixture, which made the moderns affect to give that of Christianity a place also in their poems, but the true religion was not found to become fictitious so well as the false one had done, and all their attempts of this kind had seemed rather to debase religion than heighten poetry. Spenser endeavoured to supply this with morality, and make instruction, instead of story, the subject of an epic poem. His execution was excellent, and his flights of fancy very noble and high. But his design was poor, and his moral lay so bare that it lost the effect. It is true, the pill was gilded, but so thin that the colour and the taste were easily discovered."—SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE Essay on Poetry: Miscellanea, 1689-90, 2 Pts. 8vo.

"Spenser may be reckoned the first of our heroic poets. He had a large spirit, a sharp judgment, and a genius for heroic poetry, perhaps above any that ever wrote since Virgil, but our misfortune is, he wanted a true idea, and lost himself by following an unfaithful guide. Though besides Homer and Virgil he had read Tasso, yet he rather suffered himself to be misled by Ariosto, with whom blindly rambling on marvels and adventures, he makes no conscience of probability; all is fanciful and chimerical, without any uniformity, or without any foundation in truth. In a word, his poem is perfect Fairy-land."—THOMAS RYMER on Trag. &c.

"Unhappily for literature, at least, for the learned of this age, the queen's vanity lay more in shining by her own learning than in encouraging men of genius by her liberality. Spenser himself, the first English writer of his age, was long neglected, and after the death of Sir Philip Sidney, his patron, was allowed so does almost for want. This poet contains great beauties; a sweet and harmonious versification, easy elocution, a fine imagination—yet does the perusal of his work become so tedious, that one never finishes it from the mere pleasure which it affords. It soon becomes a kind of task reading; and it requires some effort and resolution to carry us to the end of his long performance. This effect, of which every one is conscious, is usually ascribed to the change of manners. But manners have more changed since Homer's age; and yet that poet remains still the favourite of every reader of taste and judgment. Homer copied true natural manners, which, however rough or uncultivated, will always form an agreeable and interesting picture. But the pencil of the English poet was employed in drawing the affectations and conceits and fopperies of chivalry, which appear ridiculous as soon as they lose the recommendation of the mode. The tediousness of continued allegory, and that too seldom striking or ingenious, has also contributed to render the Fairy Queen peculiarly tiresome; not to mention the too great frequency of its descriptions, and the languor of its stanza. Upon the whole, Spenser maintains his place upon the shelves among our English classics, but he is seldom seen on the table, and there is scarcely any one, if he dares to be ingenious, but will confess that, notwithstanding all the merit of the poet, he affords an entertainment with which the palate is soon satiated. Several writers of late have amused themselves in copying the style of Spenser, and no imitation has been so indifferent as not to bear a great resemblance to the original. His manner is so peculiar that it is almost impossible not to transfer some of it into the copy.—DAVID HUME Hist. of Eng., Reign of Elizabeth, Appendix

We have here some of the same dogmatism which is displayed still more offensively in the historian's unfortunate Essay on Miracles. Many—some we shall presently quote whose "ingenuousness" we have no right to question—have not found their "palates soon satiated" with the Faerie Queene.

Imitations of Spenser, to which Hume refers, are rebuked by an acute—often a correct—critic, a portion of whose reflections we shall next quote:

"To imitate the fictions and sentiments of Spenser can incur no reproach; for allegory is perhaps one of the most pleasing vehicles of instruction. But I am very far from extending the same respect to his diction as his stanza. His style was in his own time allowed to be vicious, so darkened with old words and peculiarities of phrase, and so remote from common use, that Jonson boldly pronounces him to have written no language [But did not Jonson refer to the Shepherd's Calendar?] His stanza is at once difficult and unpleasant, tiresome to the ear by its uniformity, and to the attention by its length. It was at first formed in imitation of the Italian poets, without due regard to the genius of our language."—DR. JOHNSON. Rambler, No 121, May 14, 1751

See, also, Johnson's Epigram on Colley Cibber.

How utterly incapable some imitators of Spenser are of appreciating their great original, is strikingly illustrated in the lines in which Shenstone performs for himself the critical office which Dogberry desired another to do for him:

"When I bought Spenser first, I read a page or two of 'The Faerie Queene,' and cared not to proceed. After that Pope's 'Alley' made me consider him ludicrously, and in that light I think one may read him with pleasure."

The Schoolmistress, which owes its birth to this view of the subject, has been already considered: (see SHENSTONE, WILLIAM, No. 3.)

"The poetry of Spenser is remarkable for brilliant imagination, fertile invention, and flowing rhythm; yet, with all these recommendations, it is cold and tedious. To the English reader the 'Faerie Queene' presents the charm of antiquated style, which never fails to please us in our own language, but which we cannot appreciate in a foreign tongue. . . . Spenser is the author of a sort of essay on the manners and antiquities of Ireland, [vide No. 11, supra,] which I prefer to his Faerie Queene."—VISCOMT DE CHATEAUBRIAND. Sketches of Eng. Lit., i. 226, 227

"It is scarcely possible to accompany Spenser's allegorical heroes to the end of their excursions. They want flesh and blood,—a want for which nothing can compensate. The personification of abstract ideas furnishes the most brilliant images for poetry, but these meteor forms, which startle and delight us when our senses are flurried by passion, must not be submitted to our cool and deliberate examination."—ELLIS Specimens of Eng. Poet

"Even Spenser himself, though assuredly one of the greatest poets that ever lived, could not succeed in the attempt to make allegory interesting. It was in vain that he lavished the riches of his mind on the House of Pride and the House of Temperance. One unpardonable fault, the fault of tediousness, pervades the whole of the Fairy Queen. We become sick of cardinal virtues and deadly sins, and long for the society of plain men and women. Of the persons who read the first canto, not one in ten reaches the end of the first book, and not one in a hundred perseveres to the end of the poem. Very few and very weary are those who are in at the death of the Blatant Beast. If the last six books, which are said to have been destroyed in Ireland, had been preserved, we doubt whether any heart less stout than that of a commentator would have held out to the end."—LORD MACAULAY. *Edin. 1860, 12mo, and his Crit. and Miscell. Essays, 1860, 6 vols. 12mo. Did we end our quotations here, one might well suppose that the lament of a warm admirer of the Faerie Queene was well sustained:

"The Faery Queen, one of the noblest productions of modern poetry, is fallen into general neglect, that all the seal of the commentators is esteemed officious and impertinent, and will never restore it to those honours which it has, once for all, irrecoverably lost."—BISOP HUKS.

With what satisfaction would the good bishop have hailed Mr. Collier's critical edition! Let us adduce some proofs that in the present century this great poem has secured admirers as enthusiastic as the prelate himself, or as Pope,—whose eulogium we shall preface by his comments on Addison's criticism, which he warmly resented. Addison had written,

"Old Spenser next, warm'd with poetic rage,
In ancient times amus'd a barbarous age,
An age, that yet uncultivate and rude,
Where'er the poet's fancy led, pursued,
Thro' pathless fields and unfrequented floods,
To dens of dragons and enchanted woods.
But now the mystic tale, that pleas'd of yore,
Can charm an understanding age no more;
The long-spun allegories fulsome grow,
While the dull moral lyes too plain below
We view well pleas'd, at distance, all the sights,
Of arms and paltries battles, fields, and fights,
And damsels in distress, and courteous knights;
But when we look too near, the shades decay,
And all the pleasing landscape fades away."

An Account of the Greatest English Poets. Letter to Henry Sacheverell, April 3, 1694. Addison's Works, H. G. Bohn's ed., 1854, i. 23

On these lines Pope comments,

"The character he gives of Spenser is false too, [as well as that of Chaucer,] and I have heard him say that he never read Spenser till fifteen years after he wrote it."—Spence's Anecdotes sect. 1, 1728-30

Let us hear Pope's own opinion of Spenser

"After reading a canto of Spenser two or three days ago to an old lady between seventy and eighty years of age, she said that I had been showing her a gallery of pictures. I don't know how it is, but she said very right there is something in Spenser that pleases one as strongly in one's old age as it did in one's youth. I read the Faerie Queene, when I was about twelve, with infinite delight, and I think it gave me as much when I read it over about a year or two ago."—Ibid., 1743-44. See, also, Pope's Works, Bohn's ed., ii. 289, (Pope's imitation of Spenser.)

On another occasion he remarked,

"Spenser has ever been a favourite poet to me. he is like a mistress whose faults we see, but love her with them all."

The Faerie Queene was also the delight of Scott's boyhood.

"But Spenser I could have read forever. Too young to trouble myself about the allegory, I considered all the knights and ladies and dragons and giants in their outward and exoteric sense, and God only knows how delighted I was to find myself in such society. As I had always a wonderful facility in retaining in my memory whatever verses pleased me, the quantity of Spenser's stanzas which I could repeat was really marvellous."—Ashetel MS. Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. 1

Later in life Scott did not hesitate to say,

"No author, perhaps, ever possessed and combined in so brilliant a degree the requisite qualities of a poet. Learned, according to the learning of his times, his erudition never appears to load or incumber his powers of imagination, but even the fictions of the classics, worn out as they are by every pedant, become fresh and captivating themes when adopted by his fancy and accommodated to his plan. If that plan has now become to the reader of riper years somewhat tedious and involved, it must be allowed, on the other hand, that, from Cowley downwards, every youth of imagination has been enchanted with the splendid legends of the Faery Queen."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1803, 208: Todd's Edition of Spenser.

Southey was one of these "youths."

"No young lady of the present generation falls to a new novel of Sir Walter Scott's with keener relish than I did that morning to the Faery Queen. . . . The delicious landscapes which he luxuriates in describing brought every thing before my eyes. I could fancy such scenes as his lakes and forests, gardens and fountains, presented, and I felt, though I did not understand, the truth and purity of his feelings, and that love of the beautiful and the good which pervades his poetry."—Recollections: Life and Correspondence of Southey, ch. xi. See, also, MALORY, SIR THOMAS.

In his later years he writes,

"He is the great master of English versification.—Incomparably the greatest master in our language. Without being insensible to the defects of the Fairy Queen, I am never weary of reading it."—Southey to Landor, Jan. 11, 1811. Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xvi.

See, also, Landor's Imaginary Conversations. Again:

"Do you love Spenser? I have him in my heart of hearts."—To C. H. Townsend, Feb. 10, 1816: ibid., ch. xx.

Southey is said to have read the Faerie Queene through about thirty times. It will be observed that the tide is turning strongly in Spenser's favour—we shall not oppose it.

"I have finished the 'Faerie Queene.' I never parted from a (rag poem with so much regret. He is a poet of a most musical ear,—of a tender heart,—of a peculiarly soft, rich, fertile, and flowery fancy. His verse always flows with ease and nature, most abundantly and sweetly; his diffusion is not only pardonable, but agreeable. Grandeur and energy are not his characteristic qualities. He seems to me a most genuine poet, and to be justly placed after Shakespeare and Milton, and above all other English poets. . . . Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Bacon, Shakespeare, and Spenser! What a glorious reign!"—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Diary, April 6, 1812, (see, also, April 2, 3, and 4.) Life, ch. iii.

"His command of imagery is wide, easy, and luxuriant. He threw the soul of harmony into our verse, and made it more warmly, tenderly, and magnificently descriptive than it ever was before, or, with a few exceptions, than it has ever been since. It must certainly be owned that in description he exhibits nothing of the brief strokes and robust power which characterize the very greatest poets, but we shall nowhere find more airy and expansive images of visionary things, a sweeter tone of sentiment, or a finer flush in the colours of language, than in this Rubens of English poetry. His tancy teems exuberantly in minuteness of circumstance, like a fertile soil sending bloom and verdure through the utmost extremities of the foliage which it nourishes"—CAMPBELL, Specimens of Brit. Poet.

"His versification is in many passages beautifully harmonious, but he has frequently permitted himself, whether for the sake of variety or from some other cause, to baulk the ear in the conclusion of a stanza. The inferiority of the last three books to the former is surely very manifest. His muse gives gradual signs of weariness; the imagery becomes less vivid, the vein of poetical description less rich, the digressions more frequent and verbose. But we must not fear to assert, with the best judges of this and of former ages, that Spenser is still the third name in the poetical literature of our country, and that he has not been surpassed, except by Dante, in any other."—HALLAM, Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 138-9, 142. And see Index.

"To our tongue the sonnet is mortal, and the parent of insipidity. The imitation in some degree of it was extremely noxious to a true poet, our Spenser, and he was the more injudicious by lengthening his stanza in a language so barren of rhymes as ours, and in which several words whose terminations are of similar sounds are so rugged, uncouth, and unmusical. The consequence was, that many lines which he forced into the service to complete the quota of his stanza are unmeaning, or silly, or tending to weaken the thought he would express."—HORACE WALPOLE to WILLIAM ROSCOE, April 4, 1795, Letters, ed. 1861, ix. 454. See, also, ii. 257.

"Spenser's descriptions are not in the true sense of the word picturesque, but are composed of a wondrous series of images, as in our dreams."—COLERIDGE, Remains, i. 93.

In this dictum—if to be taken according to its apparent meaning—Mr. Hallam (ubi supra) cannot acquiesce; and it will be remembered that Charles Lamb (Sanity of True Genius see, also, Lon. Athen., 1848, 800) draws a distinction between Spenser's images and those presented in sleep.

Mr. Hallam also quotes Coleridge's remarks on Spenser's versification. Moore (Memoirs, iv. 51) chronicles some of Coleridge's observations on the same subject. See, also, Coleridge's Biog. Lit., 16.

Headley remarks that

"Spenser's works are an inexhaustible mine of the richest materials, forming in fact the very bulwark of our language, and it is to be lamented that they are so rarely explored for present use."—Select Beauties of Anc. Eng. Poets.

Mr. Marsh tells us that Spenser uses 81 per cent. of Anglo-Saxon, and 19 per cent. only of other words (Lects. on the Eng. Lang., 1860, 120, n.; see, also, 112, 136, 177, 234, 350, 372, 400, n., 468, 469, n., 479, n., 483, 485, 514, 526, 527, 529, 530, 534, 539, 540, 548, 567, 568, 585, 676.)

"Lord Chatham, according to Mrs. A. Pitt, was always reading Spenser. . . . She said [to Mr. Grattan] he had never read but one book.—The Faery Queen. 'He who knows Spenser,' says Burke, 'has a good hold on the English tongue.' [Fox] liked a book of Spenser exceedingly, before something else."—Recollections by Samuel Rogers, 1859, 66, 181.

The religious character of the Faerie Queene has been referred to. We revert to the subject.

"The claim of Spenser to be considered as a sacred poet does by no means rest upon his hymns alone. . . . But whoever will attentively consider the Faery Queen itself will find that it is, almost throughout, such as might have been expected from the author of those truly sacred hymns. It is a continual, deliberate endeavour to enlist the restless intellect and chivalrous feelings of an inquiring and romantic age on the side of goodness and faith, of purity and justice. . . . Spenser, then, was essentially a sacred poet; but the delicacy and insinuating gentleness of his disposition were better fitted to the veiled than the direct mode of instruction. . . . To Spenser, therefore, upon the whole, the English reader must revert as being pre-eminently the sacred poet of his country."—KEBLE, Lon. Quar. Rev., 226, 228, 231. Sacred Poetry.

"You tuned my ears to the melody of Spenser's Rhymes, a poet remarkable as well for divine morality as fancy."—HENRY MONK.

"Our sage and serious Spenser, whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas."—MILTON.

"To lackey him is all my pride's aspiring."—FLETCHER.

"Here's that creates a poet."—QUARLES.

"We will first honour her with a home-born testimony from the grave and diligent Spenser."—BEN JONSON: Masques of Queens.

"Divinest Spenser, heav'n-bred, happy muse!

Would any power into my brain infuse

Thy worth, or all that poets had before,

I could not praise till thou deserv'dst no more."

WILLIAM BROWNE Brunswick's Pastorals, 1618-15, 2 Pts. fol.

Quotations must cease, but not before we extract a few lines from a favourite critic:

"The finest things in Spenser are, the character of Una, in the first Book, the Cave of Mammon, and the Cave of Despair; the account of Memory, of whom it is said, among other things,

"The wars he well remember'd of King Nine,

the description of Belphebe, the story of Florimel and the Witch's Son, the Gardens of Adonis, and the Bower of Bliss; the Mask of Cupid; and Collin Clout's Vision, in the last Book.

"But some people will say that all this may be very fine, but that they cannot understand it on account of the allegory. They are afraid of the allegory, as if they thought it would bite them, they look at it as a child looks at a painted dragon, and think it will strangle them in its shining folds. This is very idle. If they do not meddle with the allegory, the allegory will not meddle with them. Without minding it at all, the whole is as plain as a pike-staff. It might as well be pretended that we cannot see Poussin's pictures for the allegory, as that the allegory prevents us from understanding Spenser. . . . The language of Spenser is full and copious to overflowing; it is less pure and idiomatic than Chaucer's, and is enriched and adorned with phrases borrowed from the different languages of Europe, both ancient and modern. . . . His versification is at once the most smooth and the most sounding in the language. . . . Spenser is the most harmonious of our stanza-writers, as Dryden is the most sounding and varied of our rhymists."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lects. II and III, (and see Appendix II, Milton's Eve).

Note Hazlitt's observations on the Spenserian stanza, and read the remarks on the same subject in Blackw. Mag., xxxvi. 421, (by Professor Wilson,) and xli. 66. Nor, indeed, must the student of English poetry fail to peruse every word of Wilson's seven famous papers on Spenser (six of them devoted to the "Faery Queen") in the same periodical, viz. I, xxxiv. 824, II, xxxvi. 408, III, xxxvi. 681; IV, xxxvi. 715; V, xxxvii. 49; VI, xxxvii. 540, VII, xxxvii. 659.

Of the fervour and vigour of these poems an estimate may be formed from their effect upon one of the most cautious, we had almost said coldest, of critics:

"It has been justly observed by a living writer of the most ardent and enthusiastic genius, whose eloquence is as the rush of mighty waters, and has left it for others almost as invidious to praise in terms of less rapture, as to censure what he has borne along in the stream of unhesitating eulogy, that 'no poet has ever had a more exquisite sense of the beautiful than Spenser.' . . . [Note.] I allude here to a very brilliant series of papers on the Faery Queen, published in Blackwood's Magazine during the years 1834 and 1835. [Note, 1842.] They are universally ascribed to Professor Wilson."—HALLAM, Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 136.

"A nonsensical and illiterate history"—HENRY STUBBE Plus Ultra reduced to a Non Plus, in his Legenda no History, 1670, 4to

Stubbe published 7 or 8 tracts against Sprat's and Glanvil's works in favour of the Royal Society: see GLANVIL, JOSEPH, Nos. 4, 5, 6; Watt's Bibl. Brit., (Stubbe, Henry.) Stubbe's verdict on Sprat's History is not to be accepted as final. Wood tells us that

"some account it to be one of the most exact pieces for curiousness and delicacy of language that was ever yet extant in our tongue"—(Athen. Oxon. Bliss's ed., iv 728.)

"this is one of the few books which selection of sentiment and elegance of diction have been able to preserve, though written upon a subject flux and transitory"—DR. JOHNSON Life of Sprat, p. Cunningham's ed. i. 74. See, also, Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, (The Royal Society. Sir John Hill.)

"Their history [that of the Royal Society] is writ so well by Doctor Sprat that I will insist no more on them, but go on to other matters"—BISHOP BURNET Own Times, ed 1853, i 351

This Discourse is greatly admired. He published a vol. of sermons on Mark x 15, Lon., 1677, 4to; eight other sermons, 1678-1705; a vol. of Sermons preached on Several Occasions, 1710, 8vo, repub. 1722, 8vo; assisted Settle in his Anti-Achtophel; annexed Observations on S. Sorbière's Voyage to England, 1709, 8vo; and prefixed a Latin Life of Cowley to Cowley's Latin Poems, 1668, '78, 8vo, which was also pub. in English, enlarged, with Cowley's English Works, 1669, fol., and later editions. A notice of his life will be found in Dr. Johnson's Life of Cowley. Sprat's volume of Sermons (1710, '22, 8vo) is very highly esteemed:

"The correctest writer of the age, and comes nearest to the great original of Greecæ et Romæ, by a studious imitation of the ancients. . . His sermons are truly fine."—DR. H. FULTON Discert. on Reading the Classics, 1711.

"Bishop Sprat is fine, florid, and elaborate in his style"—DR. WATERLAND

"His language is always beautiful. . . All his sermons deserve a reading"—DR. DODDRIDGE.

But Sir John Hawkins tells us that "the tinsel of Sprat disgusted" Dr. Johnson. As a poet his reputation has never been high. Pope calls him "a worse Cowley," (Steele's Anecdotes, sect. iv.) Johnson dismisses his claims in two or three contemptuous paragraphs, (Lives of the Eng. Poets;) Southey makes a very obvious pun on his patronymic, (Spec. of Eng. Poets, i. 168;) and a late very eminent critic considers his admission into the family of poets a disadvantage which his merits as a prose writer have not been able to overcome

"Unhappily for his fame, it has been usual to print his verses in collections of the British poets; and those who judge of him by his verses must consider him as a servile imitator, who, without one spark of Cowley's admirable genius, mimicked whatever was least commendable in Cowley's manner; but those who are acquainted with Sprat's prose writings will form a very different estimate of his powers. He was, indeed, a great master of our language, and possessed at once the eloquence of the orator, of the controversialist, and of the historian"—LORD MACAULAY Hist. of England, ii. ch. vi.

Against such testimony as this, the depreciation of Lord Orrery (Remarks on the Life and Writings of Swift, 1752, 237) and of Dr. Drake (Essays illustrative of the Tatler, &c., i. 69) weighs but little.

"I have heard it observed with great justice," remarks Dr. Johnson, after an enumeration of his volumes, "that every book is of a different kind, and that each has its distinct and characteristic excellence"—Life of Sprat.

"This work has always been highly esteemed for its utility and the variety of valuable illustration which the author has brought together from every accessible source"—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 398

"The history is not written in an interesting manner, it is minute on trifling, and brief on important, points. The infidel objection is often strongly stated and weakly answered. The criticisms on passages of Scripture are seldom original or profound. Patrick, Poole, Le Clerc, Heidegger, and [Samuel] Parker's Bibliotheca supply the greater part of the notes. The theological sentiments are neither correct nor consistent, and as a view of the connexion between sacred and profane history it is decidedly inferior to Shuckford and Prideaux. Gleig's edition is certainly more valuable than the former ones, but several of the above remarks are applicable to his additions as well as to the original work."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 1824, 418

Stanhope, Lady Hester, the eldest child of Charles, third Earl of Stanhope, (supra), by his first wife, Lady Hester Pitt, eldest daughter of William, first Earl of Chatham, after the death of her uncle William Pitt, the eminent statesman, with whom she was domesticated, took up her residence first in Wales, and in 1810 in Syria, and there remained until her death, June 23, 1839, aged 63. Her permanent abode was at her villa of D'Joun, on Mount Lebanon, eight miles from Sidon. Her dress was that of an Arabian chieftain, and the Bedouins long regarded her as the Queen of the Wilderness. In her later years she seems to have lost pretty much every thing but her temper,—which was despotic in the highest degree. Let us not fail to add that, in her "better days," her chaunties were co-extensive with her choler, and were often as injudiciously bestowed. For the details of her romantic life we refer to—1. Memoirs of Lady Hester Stanhope, as related by herself in Conversations with her Physician, comprising her Opinions and Anecdotes of the Most Remarkable Persons of her Time, Lon., 1845, 3 vols. p. 8vo, 2d ed., 1846; cheap ed., 1848. "Earl Stanhope has written from the best materials a most interesting biography of the younger Pitt, with whom he was connected by family ties, by sentiments of gratitude, and by the affinities of political principles, yet he has not hesitated to expose the very grave defects in his character and conduct, and has obtained approbation for candor."—GEORGE BANCROFT: Joseph Reed a Historical Essay, 1867, 8vo.

Repub. in De Pauw's ed., Hag. Com., 2 vols. 4to; l. p., r. 4to. Stanley's Greek text and Latin version were repub. Glasg., 1746, 2 vols. sm. 8vo; (a reprint from De Pauw's ed., corrected by Porson, appeared Lon., 1806, 2 vols. 8vo, some l. p.); and his Greek text was repub. Glasg., 1746, 4to, 1795, fol., (corrected by Porson,) 52 on small, 11 or 12 on large, paper: Flaxman's designs are frequently inserted. Stanley's Latin version was repub. 1819, 8vo. Stanley's edition of Æschylus was better than any of its predecessors. Of Stanley's edition the best impression is the following: Tragediæ, quæ supersunt deperditorum Fabularum Fragmenta et Scholia Græca, ex Editione Thomæ Stanleii, cum Versione Latine Accedunt variæ Lectiones et Notæ, V.V., D.D. Criticæ et Philologicæ, quibus suas passim intertextuit Samuel Butler, Cantab., 1809-16, 4 vols. 4to, £8 8s., also in 8 vols 8vo, £4 4s. Vols. i. and ii. of the 8vo edition were reviewed by Bishop Blomfield in Edin. Rev., Oct 1809, 152-163. This article elicited A Letter to C. J. Blomfield, containing Remarks on the Edinburgh Review of the Cambridge Æschylus, by Samuel Butler, Bishop of St. Asaph, Camb., 1810, 8vo. Blomfield notices this Letter in his review of vol. ii., 4to ed., and vols. iii, iv., 8vo ed., in Edin. Rev., Feb. 1812, 477-508. The student must also read Blomfield's review of this edition in Museum Criticum, ii. 498, and A Letter to the Rev. S. Butler, from the Rev. J. H. Monk, Greek Professor in the University of Cambridge, with Mr. Butler's Reply, 1810, 8vo. See, also, Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., iii. 250. Blomfield first detected and exposed Stanley's plagiarisms from Casaubon, Dorat, and Scaliger. It appears that it is not the "poor" only who "steal,"—as the modest petition of Agur (Proverbs xxx 9) would lead us to infer. But see a defence of Stanley from the supposed improper use of Casaubon's MS. Notes, in Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1821, 507. Stanley's MS. Commentaries (in 8 folio vols.) on Æschylus, and other valuable unpublished classical and Biblical papers of the same learned author, are in the Public Library at Cambridge. There are some notes on Demosthenes ascribed to his pen in vol. ix. of Dobson's Oratores Attici, Lon., 1828, 16 vols. 8vo, £9 9s.; l. p., imp. 8vo, £13 13s.; 25 on largest paper, imp. 8vo, £16 16s. "Whatever may be the merits of Mr. Phillippe's and Mr. Serjoant Peake's works, that of Mr Starkie has the advantage of them both in the rare and most important quality of being easily accessible"—Lon Law Rev., May, 1849, 201.

The Lon. Jurist (March, 1842; see, also, No. 269) also awards the preference to Starkie over Phillips and Peake; Professor Anthon (Essay on the Study of the Law) places Starkie above Phillips, Warren (Law Stu., ed. 1845, 755) considers Starkie's "incomparably the best treatise on the law of evidence hitherto published" in England, but thinks that Greenleaf's treatise (p. 735, supra) "is perhaps still better adapted than that of Mr. Starkie for a first book in this branch of legal science." See, also, TAYLOR, JOHN PITT, (infra) To the Law Review Mr. Starkie contributed art. iii. in No. 1, (On the Distinction between Questions of Law and Fact,) art. xii. in No. 2, (On the Consolidation of the Criminal Law,) and art. x in No. 4, (On Trial by Jury.) He also delivered lectures at the Inner Temple: see Warren's Law Stu., 2d ed., 1845, 14; Lon Law Rev., iii. 75. We should not omit to state that Mr Starkie was a relative of Sir Humphrey Starkie, Chief Baron of the Exchequer in the reign of Richard III.

Steele, Sir Richard, styled "The first of the British Periodical Essayists," was b. in Dublin, 1671, educated at the Charter-House and Merton College, Oxford, where he was admitted a postmaster in 1691; became an ensign in the Guards, and there led so loose a life that his religious treatise The Christian Hero was written and subsequently published with a view to his own reformation,—which it failed to effect, was appointed Gazetteer by the influence of Addison, (whom he had known at the Charter-House,) who also, as we have already seen, (ADDISON, JOSEPH, pp. 33, 39, supra), effectually aided him in The Tatler, The Spectator, The Guardian, and

The Tender Husband; from 1709 to 1713, when he was chosen M.P. for Stockbridge, Hampshire, was a Commissioner of the Stamp Office; expelled from the House of Commons for passages in The Crisis, and The Englishman, March, 1714; Surveyor of the Royal Stables at Hampton Court, Governor of the Royal Company of Comedians, Justice of the Peace for Middlesex, knighted, M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire, and a Commissioner of Forfeited Estates in Scotland, all in 1715; in January, 1720, commenced (under the name of Sir John Edgar) The Theatre, which was published every Tuesday and Saturday until April 5 following; January 25, 1720, was greatly distressed by the revocation of his patent as Governor of the Royal Company of Comedians, by which calamity he estimated his losses at nearly £10,000, (see his State of the Case, 1720, and his Epist. Corresp., 469;) in 1721 brought out, with great success, his Comedy of The Conscious Lovers, the dedication of which was acknowledged by the king by a present of £500; spent his last years at his seat at Llangunnor, near Caermarthen, Wales, and there died, of a paralytic disorder, Sept. 1, 1729. According to his own request, his body was privately interred. His first wife was a lady of Barbadoes, with whom he received a plantation; his second wife was the daughter of Jonathan Scurlock, of Llangunnor, Esq., by whom he had one daughter and two sons the latter both died young; the daughter, Elizabeth Steele, in 1732 became the wife of the Honourable John Trevor, afterwards Baron Trevor of Bromham. Steele was one of the most amiable and one of the most improvident of men. His precepts were far better than his practice; his principles proved no match for his tastes. Often sinning, often repenting, always good-natured, and generally in debt, he multiplied troubles as few men will, and bore them better than most men can.

"Steele will be found in purity and simplicity inferior to Tiltonson, to Temple in elegance and harmony, to Dryden in richness, mellowness, and variety. To the two former, however, he is equal in correctness, to the latter in vivacity, and with all he is nearly on a level as to ease and perspicuity. Steele's great misfortune has ever been the comparison, so perpetually drawn with regard to style, between himself and Addison. The proximity of their productions has naturally led to the consideration of their respective merits in point of composition; and though it must be allowed that from the best manner of Addison Steele stands widely apart, yet are there several papers which, having been written by Sir Richard with more than usual care, and with evident marks of emulation, appear to have imbibed a portion of Addisonian grace."—DR. DRAKE, Essays illustrative of the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, 2d ed., 1814, i. 201.

"Steele seems to have gone into his closet chiefly to set down what he observed out of doors. Addison seems to have spent most of his time in his study, and to have spun out and wire-drawn the hints, which he borrowed from Steele or took from nature, to the utmost. I am far from wishing to depreciate Addison's talents, but I am anxious to do justice to Steele, who was, I think, upon the whole, a less artificial and more original writer. The humorous descriptions of Steele resemble loose sketches, or fragments of a comedy; those of Addison are rather comments, or ingenious paraphrases, on the original text."—HAZLITT, Lects. on the English Comic Writers, Lect. "The comedies of Steele were the first that were written expressly with a view not to imitate the manners, but to reform the morals, of the age. . . . Steevens, George, who has already claimed our notice as a commentator on the greatest of poets, (see SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM. COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS, AND PLAYS AND POEMS, Nos. 15, 23, 26, 32, 33 & seq., and SHAKESPEARIANA, Nos. 210, 213, 226, 259, 270, 275; FARMER, RICHARD, D.D.; MALONE, EDMOND,) was b. at Stepney, 1736; became a scholar of King's College, Cambridge, 1754; spent his latter years in opulent obscurity in Hampstead, and d. there, 1800. He was a contributor to Johnson's Lives of the Poets; Dodsley's Annual Register, (in which see his Frantic Lover; Isaac Reed's Biog. Dramat.; Sayer's Caricatures; Critical Review; St. James's Chronicle; Public Advertiser, &c.; see, also, FENN, SIR JOHN; HOGARTH, WILLIAM, No. 1. He was a draughtsman as well as a writer. He was sour, splenetic, and untruthful, yet as liberal with his purse as illiberal in his temper. His chief delight was in anonymous attacks (in the Critical Review, and St. James's Chronicle) upon his fellow-lit-erateurs. He lived in a breeze, and died in a storm. His library, sold by King in 1800, contained 1943 lots, and produced £2740 15s.: see Bibliotheca Steevensiana, a Catalogue of the Curious and Valuable Library of George Steevens, Lon., 1800, 8vo; 1. p., r. 8vo; largest p., 6 copies, 4to: described in Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 427-40, n.; Clarke's Repert. Bibliog., 543. Notices of this eccentric and accomplished character and of his critical labours will be found in Gent. Mag., 1800, 1. 178, (Obituary), 1838, 11. 378; Wool's Life of Warton; Arthur Murphy's Works, vii., Pref.; Croker's Boswell's Johnson; Topog., &c. of Hampstead, 1817, (and Gent. "George Steevens and Cumberland . . . would have echoed the praises of the men whom they envied, and then have sent to the newspapers anonymous libels upon them"—LORD MACAULAY, Life of Goldsmith, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed.

"Steevens is a dangerous guide for such as do not look well about them. His errors are specious, for he was a man of ingenuity but he was often wantonly mischievous, and delighted to stumble for the mere gratification of dragging unsuspecting innocents into the mire with him. He was, in short, the very Puck of commentators."—W. GIFFORD, Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1811, 478.

Knight remarks of the ordinary reading of a passage in Antony and Cleopatra, Act III., Scene XI,

"the only recommendation of which appears to be that it gives occasion for a note by Steevens, emulating many others that have rendered the variorum edition of Shakspeare one of the filthiest books in our language. If there be a possibility of distorting Shakspeare into indecency, Steevens, in his own name or under the disguise of Amner or of Collins, never missed the opportunity."—Fictorial Shakspeare, 2d ed., 1857, vi. 312, n.

Sterne, Jacques, LL.D., uncle of Laurence Sterne, (infra) became Preb. of York, 1729; Preb. of Southwell, 1734; Preb. of York and Archdeacon of Cleveland, 1735; Archdeacon of the East Riding, 1750; Preb. of Durham, 1755; d. 1759. 1. Sterne, Laurence, nephew of the preceding, great-grandson of Richard Sterne, Archbishop of York, (infra), and son of Roger Sterne, a lieutenant in the British army, was b. at Clonmel, Ireland, (where his parents had arrived from Dunkirk only a few days before the event,) November 24, 1713, was placed at school at Halifax, England, 1723, sent by his cousin, Mr. Sterne, of Elvington, to Jesus College, Cambridge, 1733, and took the degree of B.A. 1736, and of M.A. 1740; on leaving the University, received holy orders, and, by the interest of his uncle, Dr. Jacques Sterne, obtained the living of Sutton, Yorkshire, and Jan. 16, 1740-41, a prebend in York Cathedral; was married 1741, and received from a friend of his wife the living of Stillington, also in Yorkshire, and about a mile and a half from Sutton. retained his connection with these two places for nearly twenty years, preaching on Sundays, and reading, "painting, fiddling, and shooting" during the week; published the first two volumes of Tristram Shandy in 1759, and immediately became famous, was presented by Lord Falconbridge with the curacy of Coxwold, Yorkshire, 1760, in the same year took a house at York for his wife and only child, (Lydia), but from this date appears to have spent the most of his own time either in London or on the Continent; in 1762 went to France, whither he was followed by his wife and daughter, who remained abroad—although Sterne himself returned to England more than once—until the autumn of 1767; d. at his lodgings in Bond Street, London, March 18, 1768. A standing reproach to the profession which he disgraced, grovelling in his tastes, indiscreet, if not licentious, in his habits, he lived unhonoured, and died unlamented, save by those who found amusement in his wit or countenance in his immorality.

Several of these volumes were republished, (1768, 2 vols. 12mo; 1770, 4 vols. 12mo; 1771, 4 vols. 12mo;) the whole seven were republished, 1775, 6 vols. 12mo; 1777, 6 vols.

"Tristram Shandy" is still a greater object of admiration, the man as well as the book, one is invited to dinner, when he declines, a fortnight before. As to the volumes yet published, [I and II.] there is much good fun in them, and humour sometimes hit and sometimes missed. Have you read his 'Sermons,' with his own comick figure, from a painting by Reynolds, at the head of them? They are in the style I think most proper for the pulpit, and show a strong imagination and a sensible heart; but you see him often tottering on the verge of laughter, and ready to throw his periwig in the face of his audience."—GRAY, the Poet, June 22, 1780. Gray's Letters.

There was a fictitious vol. iii. pub. 1760, 12mo, (see CARR, JOHN, LL.D.) and, Lowndes says, a fictitious vol. ix. pub. 17—, sm. 8vo. This work elicited Explanatory Remarks, 1760, &c., 2 vols. 12mo, (see Bohn's Lowndes's, 2510,) and several Shandean pamphlets, (see Month. Rev., 1760, &c.) and Yorick's Meditations, 1760, 8vo. We have already (FERRIAR, JOHN, M.D., No. 3) referred to the fact that Sterne has been stripped of many of the borrowed plumes which challenged the admiration of his unsuspecting contemporaries Rabelais, Beroalde, Tabarin, Bruseambille, Montaigne, Scarron, Lord Bacon, Donne, Burton, Bouchet, and other authors are freely laid under contribution by this ruthless plunderer of other men's goods. See, also, WAGSTAFFE, CHRISTOPHER. Of Les Serrés of Bouchet Dr. Ferriar remarks,

"I entertain little doubt that from the perusal of this work Sterne conceived the first precise idea of his Tristram Shandy. The most ludicrous and extravagant parts of the book seem to have dwelt upon his mind, and he appears frequently to have recurred to them from memory. This book has now become so extremely scarce that, for a long period, it had escaped all my inquiries, and the most persevering exertions of my friends."—Illustrations of Sterne

Disraeli suggests (Nichols's Lit. Anec., ix. 632) that Sterne took a hint from the Cock-ramble project of John Dunton.

In April, 1760, shortly after the publication of vols. i. and ii., Horace Walpole tells a correspondent,

"At present nothing is talked of, nothing admired, but what I cannot help calling a very insipid and tedious performance. It is a kind of novel, called 'The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy,' the great humour of which consists in the whole narration going backward. It makes one smile two or three times at the beginning, but in recompense makes one yawn for two hours. The characters are tolerably kept up, but the humour is forever attenuated and misused."—Letters, ed. 1861, iii. 298. See, also, 392, and vi. 273, 286.

The public thought otherwise; for Sterne received £700 for the second edition of these two volumes and for the copyright of vols. iii. and iv. Gray's opinion we have already cited.

Bishop Warburton, who admired Sterne's genius and strove to restrain its excesses, writes to Hurd, Dec. 27, 1761,

"Sterne has published his fifth and sixth volumes of Tristram. They are wrote pretty much like the first and second; but whether they will restore his reputation as a writer with the public, is another question. The fellow himself is an irrecoverable scoundrel."—Letters from a Late Eminent Prelate, Letter CLIV.

"I pride myself in having warmly recommended 'Tristram Shandy' to all the best company in town, except that at Arthur's."—Bishop Warburton to Garrick, 7th March, 1760.

"If I were requested to name the book of all others which combined wit and humour under their highest appearance of levity with the profoundest wisdom, it would be Tristram Shandy."—LARGE HUNT: Essay on Wit and Humour.

"To my mind, Uncle Toby is the most perfect specimen of a Christian gentleman that ever existed. Sir Charles Grandison is not to be compared to him. Mr. Shandy, an admirably-drawn character also, is cleverer than Uncle Toby; but 'My Uncle is the wisest man.'—C. R. LESLIE, 1840. Leslie's Autobiog. Recollections, 1860.

"If we consider Sterne's reputation as chiefly founded on Tristram Shandy, he must be regarded as liable to two severe charges,—those, namely, of indecency and affectation. Upon the first accusation Sterne was himself peculiarly sore, and used to justify the licentiousness of his humour by representing it as a mere breach of decorum, which had no perilous consequences to morals. . . . Sterne, however, began and ended by braving the censure of the world in this particular. . . . In like manner, the greatest admirers of Sterne must own that his style is affected, eminently, and in a degree which even his wit and pathos are inadequate to support. The style of Rabelais, which he assumed for his model, is to the highest excess rambling, exursive, and intermingled with the greatest absurdities. But Rabelais was in some measure compelled to adopt this Harlequin's habit, in order that, like licensed jesters, he might, under the cover of his folly, have permission to vent his satire against church and state. Sterne assumed the manner of his master only as a mode of attracting attention and of making the public stare, and therefore his extravagances, like those of a feigned madman, are cold and forced, even in the midst of his most irregular flights. . . . The style employed by Sterne is fancifully ornamented, but at the same time vigorous and masculine, and full of that animation and force which can only be derived by an acquaintance with the early English prose writers. In the power of approaching and touching the finer feelings of the heart, he has never been excelled, if indeed he has ever been equalled, and may be at once recorded as one of the most affected and one of the most simple of writers,—as one of the greatest plagiarists and one of the most original geniuses whom England has produced."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Biog. Notice of Eminent Novelists

See, also, MACKENZIE, HENRY, No. 1, (quotation from Scott,) and conclusion of the article, (quotation from Port-folio of a Man of the World.)

"Voltaire has compared the merits of Rabelais and Sterne as satirists of the abuse of learning, and I think has done neither of them justice. This great distinction is obvious: that Rabelais derided absurdities then existing in full force, and intermingled much sterling sense with the grossest parts of his book; Sterne, on the contrary, laughs at many exploded opinions and forsaken fooleries, and contrives to degrade some of his most solemn passages by a vicious levity. Rabelais flew a higher pitch, too, than Sterne. Great part of the voyage to the Pays de Lanternois, which so severely stigmatizes the vices of the Romish clergy of that age, was performed in more hazard of fire than water."—DR. FERRIAR: Illustr. of Sterne.

"Sterne has published two little volumes, called 'Sentimental Travels.' They are very pleasing, though too much dilated, and infinitely preferable to his tiresome 'Tristram Shandy,' of which I never could get through three volumes. In these there is great good-nature, and strokes of delicacy."—Horace Walpole to G. Montagu, Mar. 12, 1768. Letters, ed. 1861, v. 91.

Sterne predicted that his Sentimental Journey would please the multitude, especially the women,—"who," says he, "will read this book in the parlour, and Tristram in the bed-chamber."

We quote a few sad lines from a work recently published:

"The celebrated writer Sterne, after being long the idol of this town, died in a mean lodging, without a single friend who felt interest in his fate, except Becket, his bookseller, who was the only person who attended his interment [There was one other person, probably Mr. James, in the carriage.] He was buried in a graveyard near Tyburn, belonging to the parish of Marylebone, and the corpse, being marked by some of the resurrection men, (as they are called), was taken up soon afterwards, and carried to an anatomy professor of Cambridge. A gentleman who was present at the dissection told me [Malone] he recognised Sterne's face the moment he saw the body."—Sir James Froude's Life of Edmund Malone, 1880, 8vo.

We are unwilling to conclude without the citation of a few more opinions on this still favourite author:

"His style is . . . at times the most rapid, the most happy, the most idiomatic, of any that is to be found. It is the pure essence of English conversation in style. His works consist only of ex-cæssa,—of brilliant passages. I wonder that Goldsmith, who ought to have known better, should call him 'a dull fellow.'"

His wit is poignant, though artificial; and his characters (though the ground-work of some of them had been laid before) have yet invaluable original differences, and the spirit of the execution, the master-strokes constantly thrown into them, are not to be surpassed. It is sufficient to name them.—Yerick, Dr. Slop, Mr. Shandy, My Uncle Toby, Trim, Susanna, and the Widow Wadman. In these he has contrived to oppose, with equal felicity and originality, two characters, one of pure intellect and the other of pure good nature, in My Father and My Uncle Toby. There appears to have been in Sterne a vein of dry, sarcastic humour, and of extreme tenderness of feeling; the latter sometimes carried to affection, as in the tale of Maria, and the apostrophe to the recording angel, but at other times pure and without blemish. The story of Le Fevre is perhaps the finest in the English language. My Father's restlessness, both of body and mind, is inimitable. It is the model from which all those despicable performances against modern philosophy ought to have been copied, if their authors had known any thing of the subject they were writing about. My Uncle Toby is one of the finest compliments ever paid to human nature. He is the most unoffending of God's creatures, or, as the French express it, un tel petit bon homme. Of his bowling green, his sieges, and his amours, who would say or think any thing amiss!"—HASLITT, Lect. on the English Comic Writers, Lect. VI. (On the English Novelists).

As Haslitt contrasts Sterne with Richardson, so does the author next to be cited contrast Sterne with Mackenzie, (q. v., quotation from Sir Walter Scott.)

"We think that, on the whole, Mackenzie is the first master of this delicious style. Sterne, doubtless, has deeper touches of humanity in some of his works. But there is no sustained feeling,—no continuity of emotion,—no extended range of thought, over which the mind can brood,—in his ingenious and fantastical writings. His spirit is far too mercurial and airy to suffer him tenderly to linger over those images of sweet humanity which he discloses. His cleverness breaks the charm which his feeling spreads, as by magic, around us. His exquisite sensibility is ever counteracted by his perception of the ludicrous and his ambition after the strange. No harmonious feeling breathes from any of his pieces. He swoops 'that curious instrument, the human heart,' with hurried fingers, calling forth in rapid succession its deepest and its liveliest notes, and making only marvellous discord. His pathos is, indeed, most genuine while it lasts, but the soul is not suffered to cherish the feeling which it awakens," &c.—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD, New Month Mag., and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"Sterne, though he could not equal Fielding in fluent wit, is a paragon of lucky quaintness, and in pathos is approached by Mackenzie alone."—SIR D. K. SANDFORD, The Rise and Progress of Lit.

The last eminent commentator on Sterne is well known to be one of the most unparagon of his critics.

"He fatigues me with his perpetual disquiet, and his uneasy appeals to my risible or sentimental faculties. He is always looking in my face, watching his effect, uncertain whether I think him an impostor or not, posture-making, coaxing, and imploring me. 'See what sensibility I have—own now that I am very clever—do cry, now, you can't resist this!' The humour of Swift and Rabelais, whom he pretended to succeed, poured from them as naturally as song does from a bird, they lose no manly dignity with it, but laugh their hearty great laugh out of their broad chests as nature bade them. But this man—who can make you laugh, who can make you cry too—never lets his reader alone, or will permit his audience repose: when you are quiet, he fancies he must rouse you, and turns over head and heels, or sidles up and whispers a nasty story. The man is a great jester, not a great humourist. He goes to work systematically and of cold blood, paints his face, puts on his ruff and motley clothes, and lays down his carpet and tumbles on it."—TRACERAY, The English Humourists of the Eighteenth Century, Lect. VI, and see his Lecture on Chaucer and Humour, his Roundabout Papers, Dec. 1862, cr. 8vo, and Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 739.

Sterne, Richard, D.D., great grandfather of the preceding, was b. at Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, 1596; admitted of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1611; removed to Bene't College, 1620; elected Fellow, 1623; President of Bene't College, 1632, Master of Jesus College, 1633; ejected, 1644, and restored, 1660; Rector of Yeovilton, Somerset, 1634; Rector of Harleton, Cambridgeshire, 1642; imprisoned, and subsequently taught school, during the Commonwealth; Bishop of Carlisle, 1660; Archbishop of York, 1664; d. 1683. 1. Commentary on Psalm ciii, Lon., 1649, 8vo. 2. Summa Logice ex optimis Auctoribus collecta, 1685, 8vo. Anon. Sternhold, Thomas, a native, according to Wood, of Hampshire, according to Hollinshed, of Southampton, according to Atkins, of Gloucestershire, was educated at Oxford, subsequently became Groom to the Robes to Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and d. August, 1549. This good man's "righteous soul was grieved from day to day" by what he saw and heard around him.

"Being a most zealous reformer, and a very strict liver, he became so scandalized at the amorous and obscene songs used in the court, that he forthwith turn'd into English metrie 61 of David's Psalms, and caused musical notes to be set to them, thinking thereby that the courtiers would sing them instead of their sonnets, but did not, only some few excepted."—Wood's Oxon, Bliss's ed., i. 183, (q v)

Other editions followed 1550, 1551, 1553, 1560, 1561; but it was not until 1562 that there appeared (4to, and annexed to The Book of Common Prayer) III. The Whole Booke of Psalmes collected into English Metre by T. Sternhold, J. Hopkins, and others, conferred with the Ebrue, with apt notes to sing them withal. "I read to them the passage in Bishop Horsley's Preface to the Psalmes, where he calls Sternhold and Hopkins's an excellent translation, and denounces any one who dares to attempt a better. The beautiful parts of the Psalmes are much better in their present form than they would be in any metrical version"—THOMAS MOORE Memoirs, ii, 1853, 17.

"The first verse which I read was Pope's Pastorals; and the first criticism I recollect was an observation which I repeated after my aunt, on the great superiority of Tate and Brady's Psalmes over Sternhold and Hopkins's version. I then spoke with the confidence of youth. I think it very likely that if I were to re-examine the question I might now think it more doubtful"—Sir JAMES MACKINTOSH Life, i ch i

"The metrical version of the Psalmes, by Sternhold and Hopkins, first printed in 1562, was essentially for the people, and, accustomed as we have been to smile at the occasional want of refinement in this translation, its manly vigour, ay, and its bold harmony, may put to shame many of the feeble productions of later times"—CHARLES KNIGHT William Shakespeare a Biography: Pictorial Shakespeare, 2d ed., 1867, viii 43

"Not but there are who merit other palms;
Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms;
The boys and girls whom charity maintains Implore your help in these pathetic strains
How could devotion touch the country pews

POPE Imit of Horace, Book II, Epist I.

1779, 3 vols. 8vo. Miller & Cadell paid £500 for the copyright. It was reviewed at length by the Monthly Review for April, (279), May, (365), and June, (464), 1787, and pronounced by that authority (May, 365) "an excellent and masterly performance." It was "the most extensive and most valuable" of the treatises on political economy which had then appeared, (Lord Brougham: Philos. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, 263;) but,

"being written before the speculations of Smith in this country and the Economists in France, contains, on most of the subjects described, as different a view of the science from that now universally received, as if it were written upon another branch of learning."—LORD BROUGHAM: Phil. Philos., Part 1, 3d ed., 1868, 82.

"This work is by no means destitute of enlarged and ingenious views. It must, however, be acknowledged that, even when sound, the statements and reasonings are singularly tedious and perplexed. The author had no correct idea of the real sources of wealth, or of the means by which they may be rendered most productive."—MCCULLOCH: Let. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 11.

"A treatise which, though eclipsed by the more enlightened and profound work of Smith, is still a work in many respects deserving of attention."—PROF SMITH: Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XXVII., (g. v.)

Stevens, Henry, son of Henry Stevens, (1791-1867,) first President of the Vermont Historical and Antiquarian Society, and author of several publications, was born at Stevensville, Barnet, Vermont, Aug. 24, 1819, studied at Middlebury College, Sept. 1838 to Dec. 1839, and at Yale College, 1840 to 1843, when he graduated B.A., (M.A. 1846,) and entered the Cambridge Law School, where he spent a year, Sept. 1843; with a view to the purchase of rare and valuable books, removed to London in 1845, and has to the present date (May, 1870) resided chiefly in that city, employing most of his time in adding to the collection of American books in the British Museum, and enriching many libraries in the United States by his selections from foreign markets.

"Between the years 1847 and 1857 above £30,000 worth of Bibles, in all languages, were collected, collated, and passed into the libraries of Mr. Lenox, Mr. George Livermore, Mr. Fry, the British Museum, the Bodleian, &c. In order to reduce his labours to the greatest degree of precision, he had about 400 pages put up in very small clear type, uniform with the Nuggets, with most careful collations of each work. It was only in this way that he could identify and describe the various editions and ascertain their history. Not being satisfied with the work, only a few uncorrected proofs were taken, to serve as copy for a larger and better work"—HENRY STEVENS.

6. An Analytical Index to the Colonial Documents of New Jersey in the State Paper Offices of England; Compiled by Henry Stevens; Edited, with Notes and References to Printed Books and Manuscripts in other Depositions, by William A. Whitehead, N. York; Published for the New Jersey Historical Society, 1858, 8vo, pp. xxv., 504.

"Able and thoroughly edited"—(N York Hist. Mag, Oct. 1858, 316)

"For several years the historical students had been trying to prevail upon the Legislature of New Jersey to follow the example of N York and procure historical Documents from Europe; but, all attempts failing, in 1849 Mr Stevens's services were secured by his friend the Hon. James G. King. For nearly two years this laborious work was on the anvil. The rest of the story is told by Mr. Whitehead in his Preface, pp. xxii-xxiii."

Mr. Stevens having industriously prosecuted his researches, the committee charged with the administration of the fund provided for the procurement of the Index had the pleasure, on the 11th of September, 1861, of exhibiting to the Society nine quarto cases, covered with blue morocco, and having locks and keys, containing over eighteen hundred separate cards, each containing an abstract of some paper relating to New Jersey, beautifully engrossed, the cards being arranged chronologically, and each case having the first and last date lettered on the back, the whole forming a manuscript work of great value and unique appearance.

It was, therefore, with great cordiality and unanimity that the following resolution was passed by the Society:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the New Jersey Historical Society be presented to Henry Stevens, Esq., now in London, for his discrimination, good judgment, and fidelity in the selection and arrangement of his Index of the Colonial Documents of New Jersey, and that a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be transmitted to him by the Society."

7. Stevens's Collection of Historical Papers relating to Rhode Island: Selected, Transcribed, and Arranged by him chiefly from the State Paper Offices in London, 1640-1775, 6 vols. fol., bound in morocco. Made for and deposited in the library of John Carter Brown, of Providence. 8 Stevens's Historical Index of the Colonial Documents relating to Maryland in her Majesty's State Paper Office of England, 10 vols. 4to. Now preserved in the Library of the Maryland Historical Society a present to that institution from Mr. Peabody. It was compiled by Mr. Stevens on his own responsibility, and sold to Mr. Peabody at £100; considerably less than cost. 9 Stevens's Historical Index of Documents relating to Virginia, from 1585 to 1775, preserved in the State Paper Office of London. On 2000 cards, chronologically arranged. Deposited by exchange in the Virginia State Library in 1858. This valuable Index was never completed and engrossed. 10. Historical Nuggets Bibliotheca Americana; or, A Descriptive Account of My Collection of Rare Books relating to America, Whittingham, 18mo, vols. i., ii., pp. 805, 1858, (also 1862.) See No. 4.

"This work, printed in the best style of the Chiswick Press, regardless of time, comprises 8000 Titles given in full, with the collation and price of each work. It was intended, as far as it went, to be a manual for collectors of this expensive class of books. But it did not go very far, containing as it does not a selection, but only such books as the author happened to possess at that time. It was intended to supply the deficiencies by additional volumes; but these have never appeared, and probably never will in this form."

"The following, from a New England bookseller settled in London, is printed with remarkable accuracy. Historical Nuggets, &c.—HARRISS, p. xli.

"A similar remark has appeared in other catalogues, but, on inquiry, it is found that when Mr. Richardson's fire occurred, the Nuggets, of which a few copies had been consigned to him, were not injured."—HENRY STEVENS.

These four Catalogues, (Nos. 11-14,) bound in 2 volumes, comprising about 750 large 8vo pages in double columns, similar to the Bibliotheca Grenvilliana, describing about 20,000 volumes, under about 14,000 full titles, are printed by Whittingham on fine toned paper in the best style of the Chiswick Press. 15. Catalogue of a Collection of Singularly Interesting, Fine, and Rare Books, in which is included the Greater Portion of the Very Important Library of the Late Edward A. Crowninshield, Esq., of Boston. Sold by Auction by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson in July, 1860, 1860, 8vo, pp. 180; 1893 and 250 lots.

"Mr. Stevens, having purchased Mr. Crowninshield's library for about $10,000, had it withdrawn from sale in Boston and shipped to England. He then withdrew from the collection the Bay Psalm, the first book printed in New England, 1640, and most of the other bibliographical rarities, the great attraction of the library to him. He then combined the rest with the remainders of two other fine libraries he had recently purchased, favouring the whole with some choice lots from his own stock, such as Hulsius De Bry, Bibles, &c., and so compounded this remarkable collection. Lot No. 912, Hulsius, a very fine set which he had taken infinite pains to make up, the 26 Parts all first editions, save one, brought the unprecedented price of £335. The Crowninshield copy of Smith's Virginia and True Travels, 3 vols in 1. Lon., 1677-80, with the original portraits of the Duchess of Richmond, and Pocahontas, brought about £30, and went to Dr. Barney, of Richmond. The same copy produced $247.50 at auction in New York, Jan. 19, 1870."—HARRY STEVENS.

"This catalogue, chiefly abridged from the Nuggets, is one of the most carefully-made auction catalogues ever issued in London. The collations are given of every book, so that the volume is now of considerable value as a book of reference. Two hundred and fifty copies were printed on large paper and bound in cloth, and not offered for sale till after the auction was over."

17. The Tehuantepec Railway, its Location and Advantages under the LaSere Grant of 1869, New York, D. Appleton & Co., 1869, 8vo. Less than 50 copies on sale.

"Of this book one may read in the Historical Magazine for Aug 1869, p. 106. 'This curiously-constructed volume opens with an Introduction [by Simon Stevens, President of the Tehuantepec Railway Company] in which the character of the LaSere Grant [of 1869] for a right of way from ocean to ocean is carefully described; with copies of the Charters granted by Mexico and Vermont, and specifications of the proposed work. Then follow, what possess most interest to us,—Historical and Geographical Notes, 1453-1869, the former by Henry Stevens, the widely-known Bibliophile of London, the latter by some unknown hand. The whole is elaborately illustrated with maps and engravings, and, typographically considered, it is a volume of great beauty. In his Historical Notes, Mr. Henry Stevens has briefly glanced on the Old World as it was four hundred years ago!—and traced the progress of discovery and exploration down to 1530, especially so far as it pertained to the New World and its development and gradual recognition as an independent hemisphere. He treats of the earliest maps, the mistakes of the navigators, the blunders of the geographers, &c., &c., and endeavours to show, for the first time on record, that the coastline originally laid down as the northeastern coast of Asia was afterwards adopted as the eastern coast of North America. The effect of this discovery, it maintained, must considerably modify our previously-conceived notions as to our early geography, chronology, and history. The above-named article concludes with—'Such a paper, sandwiched in a prospectus for a new railway, is as unusual as it is judicious. The volume which contains it will be sought for and perused by hundreds who would not otherwise have cared for it, and it will be advertised and talked of . . . as no other similar production has hitherto been. For that reason, let us advise our readers who are interested in such inquiries to seek to obtain a copy.'"

"The edition of this book of 40 pages was limited to 100 copies struck off separately for private distribution. It was seen through the press with some difficulty, and there are in it many typographical errors, and some ill-considered statements, so that the whole issue still slumbers in its original package. Some few of the mistakes are alluded to in the end in the sentence beginning, 'Let him that is not without errata in his own life correct neatly with his pen, and pardon these of mine,' &c."—HENRY STEVENS.

19. Historical and Geographical Notes on the Earliest Discoveries in America, 1453-1530. With Comments on the Earliest Charts and Maps, the Mistakes of the Early Navigators, and the Blunders of the Geographers, the Asiatic Origin of the Atlantic Coast-Line of North America, how it crept in and how it crept out of the Maps. The whole illustrated by the Tehuantepec Railway Company's Map of the World on Mercator's projection, and photo-lithographic fac-similes of many of the earliest maps and charts of America; with frontispiece and six large sheets of maps; cloth, uncut, 54 pp. royal 8vo, New Haven: office of the American Journal of Science. London: office of the Author, 4 Trafalgar Square, 1869.

Only 75 copies printed for sale, all alike, on Whatman's best hand-made paper, illustrated with one new map of the world, and fac-similes of 16 of the very earliest known maps of America, arranged on five large sheets of bond-paper. Net published price, $10.

"This book is the leading article in the American Journal of Science for Nov 1869, considerably enlarged and amended, especially in reference to the voyages of the Cabots, and with the addition of several maps. The work ends on the 64th page with

"CONCLUSION."

"All these things, disjointed and crammed as they are in this little book, to the indifferent reader will no doubt seem very simple, inasmuch that some will think that they have known them all along. But, simple as they are, if credited and adopted, they will require a careful revision of our whole course of study in early American geography and history."—HENRY STEVENS.

20. The Humboldt Library: a Catalogue of the Library of Alexander Von Humboldt, with a Bibliographical and Biographical Memoir, (and portrait,) Lon., 1870, r. 8vo, pp. xxxii., 791. This excellent Catalogue was prepared under the superintendence of Henry Steven" by John Bohn, for Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, with a view of selling the library by auction; but owing to the great fire in June, 1865, in which a large portion of the library was burnt, the Catalogue was not finished and published until 1870. Extracts from Mr. Stevens's Introduction will be found in an article from his pen on Humboldt in Silliman's Amer. Jour. of Sci. and Arts, Jan. 1870.

21. Bibliotheca Historica; or, A Catalogue of 5000 Volumes of Books and Manuscripts relating chiefly to the History and Literature of North and South America, among which is included the Larger Proportion of the Extraordinary Library of the Late Henry Stevens, Sr., of Barnet, Vt., Founder and First President of the Vermont Historical and Antiquarian Society. The whole comprising such a collection of ancient and modern books, rich and rare, useful and common, as seldom occurs for sale in any country, including many titles never before recorded in an American Catalogue. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Henry Stevens, G.M.B., F.S.A., etc., sometimes Student in Yale College, now residing in London at 4 Trafalgar Square. To be sold by auction, by Messrs. Leonard & Co., at their Library Sales-Room, No. 48 Broomfield Street, in Boston, on Tuesday the 22d, Wednesday the 23d, Thursday the 24th, and Friday the 25th day of March, 1870. Sale each day to commence at 10 in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Boston. H. O. Houghton & Co., Cambridge. Riverside Press, 1870.

"This beautifully-printed volume of 256 pages is designed not merely as an auction catalogue, but a kind of pious monument erected by the author in honor of his late father. In some respects it is one of the most elaborate auction catalogues ever issued either in this country or Europe. The notes are peculiar, and are generally applied to such books as are not usually so treated, while the well-known rare books have no comments, but stand on their known merits. This must be a catalogue to be sought for long after the books are dispersed."—HARRY STEVENS.

Mr. Stevens issued in 1848 a prospectus of Bibliographia Americana: a Bibliographical Account of the Sources of Early American History, (see Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., ed 1859, iv, N. Amer. Rev., July, 1850, 205, by George Livermore, Jan. 1861, 147, by A. P. Peabody,) but this has not yet (May, 1870) made its appearance. In 1857 he edited Franklin's Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, Pleasure and Pain, Lon., 1725, 8vo., with an Introduction by Henry Stevens. Carefully Reprinted in Fac-Simile by Whittingham, 8vo. 20 copies, (see FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN, LL.D., p. 630, supra), and in July 20, 1862, issued No. 1 of My Informant Containing a List of the Principal English, French, and German Periodicals and Transactions, with the Prices to the Public and the Trade: Together with a List of above 200 Works for Sale, chiefly relating to America: Whittingham. He has also contributed to periodicals. We need hardly add that the collector of early American books and books relating to America should not be satisfied whilst he lacks any one of Mr. Stevens's publications.

"Works relating to the history of America, in which the Library is now [1868] very rich, begun in this year [1847] to form a specially noticeable feature in the catalogue of purchases. Many rare tracts had been of old in the Library, but much of the completeness of the present collection is due to the energy of the well-known American bibliophile Henry Stevens, Esq."—W. D. Stevenson, Sir John Andrew, Mus. Doc., a Choral Vicar of Dublin Cathedral, son of a professor of music, was b. in Dublin, 1761, knighted, 1802, and d. Sept. 14, 1838.

"From the year 1802 to 1816 Sir John Stevenson was constantly engaged in the formation of musical publications, in conjunction with his friend Mr. Moore. Their Irish Melodies were published in eight [nine] parts. Another work was a collection of popular national airs; and a third, a series of sacred songs, duets, and trios. Their success was complete. In 1822 Sir John Stevenson published two numbers of Psalms, the poetical parts having been written by his son-in-law, Mr. Dalton; and a few years after he collected his Cathedral Anthems, and published them in London, in two volumes. One of the last and greatest of his productions was his Oratorio of the Thanksgiving, which has often been performed at the Dublin cathedrals."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1833, ii. 542, (Obituary,) q. v.

Stevenson, John Hall, d. 1785, a kinsman of Laurence Sterne, and the "Eugenius" of his Tristram Shandy, published anonymously, Lon., 1762, 4to, (with a view of his residence, "Crazy Castle,") a volume entitled Crazy Tales, of which the critic of the Monthly Review remarks,

"We can safely aver that they are full of obscenity, whether 'evidently designed' or not, and apparently calculated to 'inflammate the passions.'"—June, 1762, 453

See Warburton's Letters; Walpole's Letters; Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1854. Sterne. After Stevenson's death was published a collection of his Works containing Crazy Tales, Fables for Grown Gentlemen, Lyric Epistles, Pastoral Cordial, Pastoral Puke, Macarony Fables, Monkish Epitaphs, &c., 1793-95, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. Stewart, Dugald, the son of Matthew Stewart, D.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Edinburgh, (infra), was b. in the College of Edinburgh, November 22, 1753, and pursued his studies at this institution with great distinction; in 1772 commenced lecturing from his father's desk, in 1774 was appointed his assistant, and on his death, in 1785, was elected his successor; in the same year succeeded Dr. Adam Ferguson (whose duties he had discharged during the session of 1778-79) in the chair of Moral Philosophy; in 1810 relinquished the active duties of the professorship to his colleague, (see BROWN, THOMAS, M.D.,) and retired to Kinnell House, on the banks of the Firth of Forth, about twenty miles from Edinburgh, "where he spent the remainder of his days in philosophical retirement." His death occurred on the 11th of June, 1828, at No. 5, Ainslie Place, Edinburgh, where he had been for a few days on a visit. He was buried in the Canongate churchyard, and a monument was erected to his memory on the southwest shoulder of the Calton Hill, near the Observatory. From the year 1806 until his death, he enjoyed the sinecure office (created for his benefit) of Gazette-Writer for Scotland,—salary £600 per annum. This descended to his family. He was married first in 1783 to Helen Bannatyne, who died in 1787; secondly, in 1790, to Helen D'Arcy Cranston, who, with a son (Lieutenant-Colonel Matthew Stewart, infra) and a daughter, survived him.

In his 19th year he composed and read before a literary association the admired Essay on Dreaming, subsequently incorporated in vol. i. of No. 1. His publications are as follows:

1. Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind. Vol. i., Edin. and Lon., 1792, 4to, (rev. in Lon. Month. Rev., 1793, i. 59, 203, 366,) Phila., 1793, 8vo. In French, by M. "He will be disappointed who shall expect from these pages an account of the progress of Dr. Robertson's mental character, farther than can be obtained in his works. We meet neither with striking anecdotes, nor discriminating touches, nor fine and descriptive sketches. We recognise in every part of the piece a great master's hand; but the painting is not historical—it is not a portrait."—Dr. THOMAS BROWN. Edin. Rev., April, 1803, 229–249.

"I read Stewart's Life of Robertson, which is a very elegant and agreeable production, and contains one or two passages executed in Stewart's happiest manner. Upon the whole, I do not think him successful in biographical composition. His conceptions of character, though formed with comprehensive design, want that individuality to which the painter of portraits must descend. His genius for writing belongs to a higher class, but it is confined to that. He is not qualified to be the first of an inferior class."—FRANCIS HORNES. Memoirs and Correspondence, (p. 9.)

"This criticism we think to be just. In his Life of Adam Smith, Stewart omitted many anecdotes relating to Smith's habits and manners which would have given life and reality to his narrative and fulness and finish to his portrait."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1843, ii. 14, n.

Part 1 was favourably reviewed by Sir J. Mackintosh in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816, 180–244; and less favourably noticed in Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1817, 39–72, (on which see Blackw. Mag., ii. 57, 159.) Part 2—A Second Dissertation, &c.—was favourably reviewed by Sir J.

Mackintosh in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1821, 220–267, and less favourably noticed by Dr. Sayers, of Norwich, in Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1822, 474–514. These two Parts have since been republished as the First Preliminary Dissertation to the Encyclopædia Britannica, editions Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth, (1853–60.) See MACKINTOSH, RT. HON. SIR JAMES, (p. 1180); NAPIER, MACVEY, (p. 1399.)

"It will be difficult to name a work," remarks Mackintosh, in his review of Part 1, "in which so much refined philosophy is joined with so fine a fancy, and so much elegant literature with such a delicate perception of the distinguishing excellences of great writers, and with an estimate in general so just of the services rendered to knowledge by a succession of philosophers."—102.

See, also, Sir James's Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., and same in his Miscell. Works.

"I have just read Dugald Stewart's Preliminary Dissertation," writes Sydney Smith to Francis Horner, in 1816. "In the first place, it is totally clear of all his defects no insane dread of misrepresentation; no discussion put off till another time, just at the moment it was expected and would have been interesting; no unmanly timidity, less formality of style and cathedral pomp of sentence. The good it would be trite to enumerate: the love of human happiness and virtue, the ardour for the extension of knowledge; the command of fine language; happiness of allusion, varied and pleasing literature; tact, wisdom, and moderation. Without these high qualities, we all know, Stewart cannot write."—Memoirs of Rev. Sydney Smith, ii., Letter CXXI.

See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., lxx. 48, 60; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, i. 592.

"As a philosophical view of the progress of the metaphysical science, it is almost worthless. He never once rises to any comprehensive principle. There is no unity in that mass of writing of criticism and notes. He never attempts to seize the spirit of any age and to show how it influenced others. All is isolated Pleasant and clever as the adversaria of some student, but very inefficient if looked on as a treatise or consulted as a history. As a specimen of his carelessness, we may mention the entire omission of Spinoza, a man whose influence on speculative philosophy has been only second to that of his master Des Cartes. His extreme carelessness as to any systematic comprehension of what he was to perform, and his neglect as to arrangement of materials, are, as is remarked by a writer in the 'Quarterly Review,' [xxvi. 477, Dr. Sayers,] shown in the author's 'Advertisement,' wherein we are told that his original design (as is well known to his friends) was to comprise in ten or twelve sheets all the preliminary matter which he was to contribute to the 'Supplement.' It has now extended to about six times this length; and we are informed that he has only discussed one of the three divisions under which he had projected to arrange his subject. We cannot but observe that we think this fact sufficiently justifies all that we had ventured to say of the unpremeditated and desultory manner in which the work must have been prepared."—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 722.

"It may seem a harsh and presumptuous deliverance, but we have no dread of its being gainsaid,—that in our higher Philosophical Literature it would be difficult to find a less adequate treatment of so great a theme. From the absence of coherence,—the absence of any trace of unity or comprehensive principle,—the Dissertation is like the expansion of a commonplace book than an effort to contemplate the continuous flow of Human Thought. It evinces, too, an extraordinary defect of sympathy with the whole progress of speculation in modern continental Europe. Stewart manifestly knew nothing of KANT, and he did not think it necessary to take notice of SPINOZA."—PROFESSOR J. P. NICHOI. Cyc. of Biog., ed. by E. Rich, 3d ed., 1858, 740.

What the celebrated editor of Dugald Stewart's Works, Sir William Hamilton, by his premature death was prevented from adding to his edition, one of his devoted pupils has executed in a way which shows how well he is versed in the sound and acute method of his excellent master, and how able he would be to teach Philosophy in any Scottish University."—CH. A biographical sketch of Stewart, by his son, was published in the Annual Obituary for 1828; and of this paper 20 copies were privately reprinted, Edin., 1838, r. 8vo, under the title of Memoir of the Late Dugald Stewart, Esq., Author of the "Philosophy of the Human Mind," by Lieut.-Col. Matthew Stewart. This son, very foolishly, destroyed his father's MSS. of the Philosophy of Man as a Member of a Political Association, (incomplete,) Lectures on Political Economy, published from a duplicate, (ut supra), and continuation of the Encyclopædia Dissertation. He also destroyed MSS. of his own which he calculated had cost him thirteen years' labour. See STEWART, LIEUT.-COL. MATTHEW. It will ever be regretted that Sir William Hamilton exercised so rigid an economy in annotation when the sheets of his invaluable edition of Stewart's Works were passing from his desk to the printing-room:

"In regard to what I have myself contributed to this collection, I may repeat that I have limited my interference strictly to the province of an editor, and it was manifestly no part of my official duty to meddle with the author's reasonings. Accordingly, there has been nothing added by me, in the view of vindicating, or supplementing or confirming, or qualifying or criticising, Mr Stewart's doctrines. I have proposed, exclusively, to render this edition the one in which these might most conveniently be studied."—Collected Works of Dugald Stewart, ii.

For what he has done, however,—the rectification and filling up of authorities and their citations and explanatory notes,—we are duly thankful.

It has been remarked that Stewart

"left the Scottish School, in all vital respects, in the condition in which he found it,—having, in the words of Cousin, 'a commencement in psychology, but no regular logic, neither a metaphysic, nor a theodæce, nor a cosmology,—a little of morals and politics, but no system'."—PROFESSOR J. P. NICOL: Cyc. of Biog.

In contrast with this, or certainly as supplementary to it, should be quoted the summary of the greatest modern representative of British philosophy:

"The Scottish School of Philosophy is distinctively characterized by its opposition to all the destructive schemes of speculation—in particular, to Skepticism, or the uncertainty of Knowledge; to Idealism, or the non-existence of the material world, to Fatalism, or the denial of a moral universe. Reid has the merit of originating this movement, and Stewart the honour of continuing and promoting and extending it."—SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON. Lects. on Metaphysics, Appendix (C.)

Mr. Morell arranges Stewart's contributions to Scottish philosophy under the following heads:

"1. He introduced many great improvements into the metaphysical philosophy of his school. . . .

"2. Another service which Stewart rendered was to revise the classification which Reid had left behind him, of the phenomena of the human mind. . . .

"3. But one of the greatest services which Stewart rendered to the philosophy of his country is due to the manner in which he illustrated, confirmed, and adorned it by his teaching. Reid seemed as if he gloried in standing directly opposed to the authority of more than two thousand years. Stewart, on the contrary, rather sought to prove that the philosophy of other ages and other nations often tended to support his own."—Hist. and Crit. View of the Spec. Philos. of Europe, &c., ii. ch. v. See also, Index.

But we have already devoted more space than we can well afford to the Scottish philosophy, (see REID, THOMAS, D.D.) Stewart's style of composition has always been considered one of the very best.

"Dugald Stewart has carried embellishment farther into the region of metaphysics than any other author that has preceded him, and his embellishment is invariably consistent with perfect sobriety of taste."—ROBERT HALL

"The sagacious, the enlightened, and the virtuous Dugald Stewart, in whose writings are united the perspicuity of Dr. Reid, the acuteness of Adam Smith, and the precision of David Hume."—DR. PARR Spiritual Sermon

"Few writers rise with more grace from a plain groundwork to the passages which require greater animation or embellishment. He gives to narrative, according to the precept of Bacon, the colour of the time, by a selection of happy expressions from original writers. Among the secret arts by which he diffuses elegance over his diction, may be remarked the skill which, by deepening or brightening a shade in a secondary term, by opening partial or preparatory glimpses of a thought to be afterwards unfolded, unobservedly heightens the import of a word, and gives it a new meaning, without any offence against old use."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., i. 405.

To these eulogies on the elaborate composition of the author, we would we add, did space permit, a few attestations to the extraordinary eloquence of his extemporaneous lectures:

"All the years I remained about Edinburgh," remarks a distinguished philosopher, "I used as often as I could to steal into Mr. Stewart's class to hear a lecture, which was always a high treat. I have heard Pitt and Fox deliver some of their most admired speeches, but I never heard anything nearly so eloquent as some of the lectures of Professor Stewart. The taste for the studies which have formed my favourite pursuits, and which will be so to the end of my life, I owe to him."—JAMES MILL

"To me," exclaims another of his pupils, "his lectures were like the opening of the heavens! I felt that I had a soul! His noble views, unfolded in glorious sentences, elevated me into a higher world! I was as much excited and charmed as any man of cultivated taste would be who, after being ignorant of their existence, was admitted to all the glories of Milton and Cicero and Shakespeare. They changed my whole nature."

"In short, Dugald Stewart was one of the greatest of didactic orators. Had he lived in ancient times, his memory would have descended to us as that of one of the finest of the old eloquent sages."—LORD COCKBURN Memoirs of his Time, 1856, ch. i.

See, also, ch. iii., v., vii.; and to the same effect see Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. i.; Alison's Hist. of Europe, 1815-1852, ch. v.; and several of the authorities cited above.

"Without derogation from his writings," observes Mackintosh, "it may be said that his disciples were among his best works."

... He lived to see his disciples distinguished among the lights and ornaments of the council and the senate."—Prælim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

Still, John, b. at Grantham, Lincolnshire, 1543 (?), and educated at Christ College, Cambridge, became Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity, 1570; Preb. of Westminster, 1573; Master of St. John's College, 1574, and of Trinity College, 1577; Archdeacon of Sudbury, March 6, 1576-7; Bishop of Bath and Wells, Feb. 11, 1592-3; d. Feb. 26, 1607-8. To Still is ascribed, by the general consent of antiquaries, A right pithy, pleasant, and merie Comedy, intytuled Gammer Gurton's Needle; played on the stage not longe ago, in Christes Colledge, in Cambridge. Made by Mr. S., master of art, &c., Lon., 1575, 4to. Rhodes, 2399, £10; Bindley, Pt. 3, 2051, £19 5s., G. Daniel, July, 1864, 652, £64. Again, 1661, 4to. Repub. in Hawkins's Origin of the Old English Drama; Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. ii., &c. Collier and Malone assign 1565 as the date of the first representation of this play; but it is merely conjectural, as one rather earlier might be chosen with equal probability. Still is said in the biographies to have been born in 1543; but this date seems to be too low. He became Margaret's Professor of Divinity in 1570. Gammer Gurton's Needle must have been written while the Protestant establishment, if it existed, was very recent, for the person is evidently a papist.—HALLAM, Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, ii. 166, n.

Nicolas Udall's Ralph Royster Doyster is esteemed the first, Misogonus the second, and Gammer Gurton's Needle the third, English comedy. The second and third are in long and irregularly-measured rhyme. The second act of the Needle opens with what Warton calls "the first Chanson à Boire, or Drinking Ballad, of any merit in our language."

"Backe and side go bare, go bare," of which an excellent translation into Latin, preserving the measure, with rhymes and double rhymes, by Dr. Maginn, will be found in Notae Ambrosianae, April, 1822, (Blackw. Mag., xii. 108.)

"The humour of this curious old drama . . . is broad, familiar, and grotesque; the characters are sketched with a strong though coarse outline, and are to the last consistently supported."—DR. DRAKE, Shakespeare and his Time, i. 233.

"It is impossible for any thing to be meaner in subject and characters than this strange farce, but the author had some vein of humour, and, writing neither for fame nor money, but to make light-hearted boys laugh, and to laugh with them, and that with as little grossness as the story would admit, is not to be judged with severe criticism."—HALLAM, Lit. Hist. of Europe, ii. 166.

"The writer has a degree of jocularity which sometimes rises above buffoonery, but is often disgraced by lowness of incident. Yet in a more polished age he would have chosen, nor would he perhaps have disgraced, a better subject."—WARTON: Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 180, (q. v.)

"He, in his youth, writ an Irenicum for healing our divisions, with so much learning and moderation that it was esteemed a masterpiece. "The injustice of intolerance is combatted and exposed in a very brief and masterly manner by Bishops Taylor and Stillingfleet. Both plead for religious liberty, the one when it was violated by oppression, the other when it was in danger from fresh resentments"—BISHOP WARBURTON.

In contrasting Tillotson and our author, an eminent authority remarks,

"Stillingfleet was a man of much more learning, but of a more reserved and a haughtier temper . . . He was a great man in many respects. He knew the world well, and was esteemed a very wise man . . . He applied himself much to the study of the law and records, and the original of our constitution, and was a very extraordinary man"—BISHOP BURNET: Hist. of his Own Times, ed 1837, i 343, 344.

Tillotson himself, in a letter to Frederick Spanheim, calls Stillingfleet The Glory of our Church,—De quo Ecclesiæ nostra merito gloriatur; see Birch's Life of Tillotson.

"A man deeply versed in ecclesiastical antiquity, of an argumentative mind, excellently fitted for polemical dispute, but perhaps by those habits of his life rendered too much of an advocate to satisfy an impartial reader. In the critical reign of James II he may be considered as the leader on the Protestant side, but Wake, Tillotson, and several more would deserve mention in a fuller history of ecclesiastical literature."—HALLAM Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii 269. See, also, 276, 298, 381.

"When I was a young man, I had formed a mean opinion of the reasoning faculties of Bishop Stillingfleet, from reading Mr Locke's Letter and two replies to him, but a better acquaintance with the bishop's works has convinced me that my opinion was ill formed. Though no match for Mr. Locke in strength and acuteness of argument, yet his 'Origines Sacre,' and other works, show him to have been not merely a searcher into ecclesiastical antiquities, but a sound divine and a good reasoner"—DR. WARREN, Bishop of Llandaff.

"Of Locke be [Coleridge] spoke, as usual, with great contempt,—that is, in reference to his metaphysical work. He considered him as having led to the destruction of metaphysical science by encouraging the unlearned public to think that with mere common sense they might dispense with disciplined study. He praised Stillingfleet as Locke's opponent."—H. C. Robinson's Diary, &c., Bost ed., 1870, i 200.

"When we review his public life, the amount of labor accomplished by him seems enormous. Its mere recapitulation is sufficient to appall an ordinary mind. The judgments delivered by him on his Circuit comprehend thirteen volumes. The Reports [Cranch, Wheaton, Peters, and Howard] of the Supreme Court during his judicial life occupy thirty-five volumes, of which he wrote a full share. His various treatises on legal subjects cover thirteen volumes, besides a volume of Pleadings. He edited and annotated three different treatises, with copious notes, and published a volume of Poems. He delivered and published eight discourses on literary and scientific subjects before different societies. He wrote biographical sketches of ten of his contemporaries; six elaborate reviews for the North American, [1817 et seq.] three long and learned memorials to Congress. He delivered many elaborate speeches in the Legislature of Massachusetts and the Congress of the United States. He contributed a large number of valuable articles to the Encyclopædia Americana, and to the American Jurist. He also drew up many other papers of importance, among which are the Argument before Harvard College on the subject of the Fellows of the University, the Reports on Codification, and on the Salaries of the Judiciary, several very important Acts of Congress, such as the Crimes Act, the Judiciary Act, the Bankrupt Act, besides many other smaller matters. In quantity, all other authors in the English Law, and judges, must yield to him the palm."—Story's Life, ii. 506.

To these should be added his unprinted Digest of Law, supplementary to Comyns's, and on the same plan, now in three MS. folio volumes in the Law Library of Harvard University; see Catalogue, 1842, 238, and Story's Life, i. 119. The three treatises above referred to as edited by Judge Story are: I. Chitty on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, Bost., 8vo, 1809; 2d ed., 1819, II. Abbot on Shipping, 8vo, 1810; 2d ed., 1829; III. Lawes on Assumpsit, 8vo, 1811; see Story's Life, i. 204, 570. His articles in Encyclopædia Americana (a gratuitous contribution to his friend Dr. Francis Lieber, and gratefully acknowledged by him,—see his Civil Liberty, ed. 1859, 216, n.) are the following: Common Law; Congress of the United States; Conquest; Contracts; Corpus Delicti; Courts of England and the United States, (all in vol. iii.); Criminal Law; Death Punishment; Domicil; Equity; Evidence; Jury; Lien; Law; Legislation and Codes; Natural Law; National Law; Prize; Usury, (all in vols. iv.-xii.) These essays occupy more than 120 pp. closely printed in double columns. See Story's Life, ii. 26-27, 241; Lieber's Essays on Prop. and Lab., 34, n.; Park's Equity, 1831, 15. See

York, 1821, 8vo, and the American Jurist, see Story's Life, i. 283, 434. Nor were all these multiplied labours sufficient to quench his indomitable zeal in the cause of the learning of his profession,—the inherited "debt" to which one would have thought he had already discharged fourfold: not so thought Judge Story. Acting upon the spirit of the precept Nil actum reputans dum quid superesset agendum, death found him busy with projects for future usefulness: The Law of Shipping, Equity Practice, Admiralty, embracing the Prize and Instance branches, and the Law of Nations, were each to have formed the subject of an elaborate treatise; and Reminiscences of his times and contemporaries, somewhat after the manner of Charles Butler, (p. 312, supra), would have fitly rounded a well-spent life. See letter of Charles Sumner to William W. Story, in Story's Life, ii. 573. In 1835 appeared a selection of Judge Story's Miscellaneous Writings, Literary, Critical, Juridical, and Political, Bost., 8vo, (see Story's Life, ii. 215, 237; Chris. Exam., 1835; Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvii. 32, by A. Hayward;) and an enlarged edition, under the title of Miscellaneous Writings, edited by his son, William W. Story, was published in 1852, (some 1854), 8vo, pp. x., 828. This volume should be in every public and private library; and next to it should stand, Life and Letters of Joseph Story, &c.; Edited by his son, William W. We had intended to quote the opinions of a number of eminent authorities respecting the subject of our sketch as a man and a legal writer, but this indulgence want of space obliges us to restrict. For the following estimate of his character, written at our request, we are indebted to a valued friend of ours, who knew and loved the subject of his eulogy and was known and beloved by him:

"That which characterized Judge Story, as a man, a scholar, a jurist, and a judge, may perhaps be summed up in this manner: He was of a most kind and genial temper as a husband, father, and friend. Aiding, in whatever manner, was a delight to him. He had a most sympathizing soul, and jealousy was unknown to him. Whether a person applied to him in need, whether a student, young or old, desired his advice, whether an enterprise of common utility or elevated character was to be promoted, he was ready to aid to his utmost power in its furtherance. He had a large soul, and took the deepest interest in all branches and all culture. He was a patriot in the widest sense, warmly loving his country and her institutions, but his patriotism did not narrow his mind. Humanity was his earthly deity. He was ardently devoted to his profession; but here, too, the law had no confining effect. Holding the principles of the Common Law in great honour, he acknowledged whatever is great in the Civil Law and in the jurisprudence of any other country,—a fact well proved by his Decisions and Opinions, and especially by those branches of the law which he first carved out and presented as separate parts. In this respect he was perhaps the most enlightened jurist that our land has produced. If we may justly say that the three constituents of a great judge are a deep, detailed, and continuous study of the law, unswerving conscientiousness mellowed by kindly sympathy, and philosophical acumen combined with the rare art of analyzing complex cases into their elements in order to rise from them again safely and steadily to general rules, we may assert that he especially excelled in the two first, having, however, few superiors in the last. He added to all this the important faculty of a transparent and lucid language. He was fortunate in rising early to a high station, so that he was enabled by his gifts, labours, and correct notions, as well as by the purity of his feelings, to make a distinct impression on the history of his country. So much so, that we know of no foreigner desirous of becoming thoroughly and comprehensively acquainted with the United States that leaves his works unstudied. His name will forever grace the list of leading men in a period of our country which we fear was greater than that in which we live."—Dr. FRANCIS LISBEE: Letter to S. Austin Allibone, January, 1857.

"I think all the treatises of my friend Story are, upon the whole, the most finished and perfect of their kind to be met with in any language, foreign or domestic; and for learning, industry, and talent, he is the most extraordinary jurist of the age."—CHANCELLOR KENT Letter, July 31, 1841. *Louisa. Mr. Story's statue of George Peabody, the philanthropist, was unveiled at London, June 23, 1869, on which occasion the Prince of Wales remarked,

"I have not yet had the opportunity of seeing the statue which is about to be unveiled; but, having had the privilege of knowing the sculptor, Mr. Story, for the space of now about ten years, I am sure it will be one worthy of his reputation, and worthy also of the man to whom it is dedicated."

It is estimated that he made more than 5000 designs; and of these 3000 were engraved by Colins, Heath, Parker, Cromek, and Medland. His best-known illustrations are those in the Town and Country Magazine, Bell's British Poets, Novelist's Magazine, Boydell's Shakespeare, Milton, Spenser, Don Quixote, Walton's Complete Angler, Rogers's Italy, Rogers's Poems, and—considered by Lee-

There are upwards of 2000. They cost him more than £200, and were sold by him to the British Museum for £90.

"Laurence, Constable, Wilkie, and Chantrey were his great admirers, and Turner proved the sincerity of his admiration by painting a picture in avowed imitation of him. Stow, John, b. in London, 1525, after dividing his attention between his tailor's shop and antiquarian pursuits, when about forty years of age resolved to devote himself to the latter, and followed the pursuit with great zeal and until his death, April 5, 1605. His declining years were embittered by penury; and we find him when nearly eighty years of age constituted by royal letters-patent a public beggar, and recommended to charity on the ground of his having "compiled and published diverse necessary books and chronicles." The author of the article on Stow in the English Cyclopædia, Biography, v., 1857, 746–749, after remarking that the accounts that have been given of Stowe's publications are for the most part very defective, confused, and contradictory, presents an excellent summary, which, with the authorities cited below, we commend to the attention of the reader: our own recital must be very brief.

1. A Summarie of Englysh Chronicles, Lon., (1561,) 12mo. A copy, supposed unique, is in the Grenville Library. Lowndes also notices editions: 1566; 1570; 1575, 8vo; 1579; 1584; 1587; 1590; 1598; 1604, 16mo. Chalmers describes an ed. 1578, 8vo. Mr. Thomas (his ed. of the Survey, &c., infra) suggests that Stow published an edition every year.

After his death it was republished, with Continuations, under the title of The Abridgement of the English Chronicles, by E. H., (Edmond Howes,) 1607, sm. 8vo; 1610, sm. 8vo; 1611, sm. 8vo. (J. Lilly's Bibl. A.-C., 1869, £3 12s. 6d.;) 1618, sm. 8vo. Stow also published a Summarie of Chronicles Abridged 1566, 8vo; with Continuations, 1587, 8vo; 1579, 8vo; 1584, 1587, 1598, 1604: see GRAYTON, RICHARD. See Herlert's Typ. Antiq., ii. 853, n.; Bibl. West., 3770.

2. Annales; or, A General Chronicle of England from Brute unto this Present Year of Christ, 1580, 4to; 1592, 4to; 1600, 4to; 1605, 4to. J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1609, 126, £3 13s. 6d. Continued by Edmund Howes, 1615, fol. Libri, 2546, Jas. I.'s copy, fine paper, £2 12s. 2d. ed., to 1631, 1631, fol. Holland, 1660, £3 7s.; Evans, in 1818, thick paper, £6 2s. 6d.; Duke of Grafton, 887, thick paper, £6 2s. 6d. See Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1840, i. 380; Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. The Chronicles, (edits. 1600, 1605,) Stow tells Whitgift, were but an abstract of a larger work ready for the press,—which it never reached.

3. A Survey of London, 1598, sm. 4to; 2d ed., 1603, sm. 4to, 3d ed., continued, &c. by A. M., (Anthony Munday,) 1618, sm. 4to; 4th ed., enlarged by A. M. and H. D., (Anthony Munday and Humphrey Dyson, C. J., and others,) 1633, fol.; 5th ed., Enlarged and Continued, with Life of Stow and Appendix, by John Strype, 1720, 2 vols. fol. "He well deserves to be remembered with honour. . . . He always protested, and we may take his honest word for it, that he never was swayed by favour or fear in any of his writings; but that he had impartially, to the best of his knowledge, delivered the truth. This good opinion the greatest of our later historians seem to have of him."—BISHOP NICOLSON. Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 59.

2. Uncle Tom's Cabin, Bost., 1852, 2 vols 12mo; Illustrated ed., 1853, 8vo. Originally published in weekly parts in the (Washington) National Era from June 5, 1851, to April 1, 1852. In book-form the sale in the United States reached 100,000 copies in eight weeks, 200,000 within a year, and 313,000 by April 28, 1856. It is said that thirty editions were pub. in London in 1852 in six months,—but here we will borrow a note from a transatlantic authority:

"The first London edition was published in May, 1852, and was not large; for the European popularity of a picture of negro life was doubted. But in the following September the London publishers furnished to one house 10,000 copies per day for about four weeks, and had to employ 1000 persons in preparing copies to supply the general demand.

"We cannot follow it beyond 1852; but at that time more than a million of copies had been sold in England, probably ten times as many as have been sold of any other work, except the Bible and Prayer-Book.

"In France 'Uncle Tom' still covers the shop-windows of the Boulevards; and one publisher alone, Eustace Barba, has sent out five different editions in different forms. Before the end of 1852 it had been translated into Italian, Spanish, Danish, Swedish, Dutch, Flemish, German, Polish, and Magyar. There are two different Dutch translations and twelve different German ones; and the Italian translation enjoys the honour of the Pope's prohibition. It has been dramatised in twenty different forms, and acted in every capital in Europe and in the free States of America."—Edin. Rev., April, 1855, art. 1., (Slavery in the U. States.)

(For particulars of the British editions, see S. Low & Son's British Catalogues, Lon., 1852–70.) We should like to supplement this bibliographical note by stating the number of copies sold to the present date; but we are assured, on the best authority, that it is impossible to estimate them,—but that they "amount to millions."

We are, however, enabled to present a List of the Translations of Uncle Tom's Cabin to Oct. 1, 1862:

French, 3 or 4 versions.	Russian, 2 versions.
German, 13 or 14 "	Polish.
Dutch, 2 "	Magyar, 3 "
Danish.	Wendish.
Swedish.	Wallachian, 2 "
Portuguese.	Armenian.
Spanish.	Arabic.
Italian.	Romaic.
Welsh, 2 "

It is said that there is also a Chinese version and a Japanese version.

Mr. Thomas Watts, late of the British Museum, had an extensive collection of these different translations; and perhaps no one was better able to compare their respective merits. Mrs. Stowe subsequently published Peep into Uncle Tom's Cabin, &c. for Children, Lon. and Bost., 1853, fp. 8vo, and The Christian Slave, a Drama, founded on Uncle Tom's Cabin, Bost., 1855, 12mo.

In December, 1868, there was published in London a book recently completed, entitled My Recollections of Lord Byron, and those of Eye-Witnesses of his Life, by the Countess Guiccioli; Translated by Hubert E. H. Jerningham, 2 vols. 8vo. This book, reviewed in Blackw. Mag., July, 1869, &c., was reprinted in New York in March, 1869, 8vo, pp. 670; and in September, 1869, there appeared in the Atlantic Monthly Magazine, Boston, and Macmillan's Magazine, London, an article entitled The True Story of Lady Byron's Life. This was reviewed with great severity in the Quarterly Review for October, 1869, (The Byron Mystery,) The Saturday Review, London Times, Pall Mall Gazette, and many other English, (see Littell's Living Age, Oct. 9, 1869,) American, French, and German periodicals. As an impartial chronicler, it is proper to state that we know of no instance of such sweeping censure—of such general, almost universal, condemnation—as that with which Mrs. Stowe's alleged offence was visited; and this equally by the few who believed as by the many who disbelieved her story. In September, 1869, three volumes upon the subject were published in London: I. A Complete Résumé of the Stowe-Byron Controversy, by the Editor of Once-a-Week, cr. 8vo. II. The True Story of Lord and Lady Byron, as Told by Lord Macaulay, Thomas Moore, Lord Lindsay, Leigh Hunt, the Countess of Blessington, the Countess Guiccioli, Lady Byron, and by the Poet himself; in Answer to Mrs. Beecher Stowe; Edited by J. M., [John Camden Hotten,] 12mo. III. A Vindication of Lord Byron, by Alfred Austin, cr. 8vo. These were followed by—IV. Medora Leigh; a History and an Autobiography, with an Introduction and Commentary on Charges brought against Lord Byron by Mrs. Beecher Stowe, by Charles Mackay, Editor, Dec. 1869, cr. 8vo; New York, Jan. 1870, 8vo, pp. 63. V. The True Story of Mrs. Shakespeare's Life, Bost., Jan. 1870. Reprinted from a London magazine. In December, 1869, Mrs. Stowe reaffirmed her original statement, in a volume entitled Lady Byron Vindicated: a History of the Byron Controversy from its Beginning in 1816 to the Present Time, Boston, 16mo. We use much milder language than most of the lady's critics when we say that this vindication is considered unsatisfactory.

Mrs. Stowe is the author of The Two Altars, (Amer. Anti-Slavery Tracts, No. 13;) of five tracts,—A Word to the Sorrowful, My Expectation, My Strength, Strong Consolation, and Things that Cannot be Shaken,—each 82mo, pub. in London in 1858; of articles in Hall's Monthly Magazine, Godey's Lady's Book, The New York Evangelist, The Independent, Our Young Folks, Old and New, &c.; and of the Introduction to the Works of Charlotte Elizabeth, (Mrs. Tonna,) N. York, 1845, 3 vols. 8vo, and The Garies and their Friends, by F. J. Webb, Lon., 1857, cr. 8vo—see, also, BEECHER, REV. CHARLES, No. 1, NELL, WILLIAM C.; PARSONS, C. G. A selection from her writings, entitled Golden Fruit in Silver Baskets, from Harriet Beecher Stowe, was pub. Lon., 1859, 32mo; and some of her poetry will be found in a volume of Chimes of Freedom and Union, Bost., 1861, and Lyra Americana, Lon., 1865, 12mo. See, also, her stanzas, Still with Thee, the music by Rev. Charles Beecher, and her contributions to Autobiography, &c. of Lyman Beecher, N. York, 1864, 2 vols. 12mo. In 1843-44 (succeeding General John A. Dix) he was the editor of The Northern Light. Perhaps it would be correct to say that his rank among American poets is the same as that generally assigned to Dryden among English poets,—one of the first of the second class. As a descriptive poet, Dr. Griswold (Poets and Poetry, &c.) doubted if he had a superior in America. Poe, (Marginalia, cxxiv.), whilst remarking that "as a descriptive poet Mr. Street is to be highly commended," complains that "he appears, however, not at any time to have been aware that mere description is not poetry at all"

His poem of The Settler has been translated into German; and The Lost Hunter, and other poems of his, have been illustrated both in America and England.

He has ready for the press a sequel to Woods and Waters, entitled Lake and Mountain, or Autumn in the Adirondacks; and Eagle Pine, or Sketches of a New York Frontier Village.

There is also ("a synopsis of Miss Strickland's Queens") *A Series of [27] Portraits of Distinguished Female Sovereigns, &c., with Biographical, &c. See Lon. Athen., 1861, ii. 4, 693. To these volumes should be added Nos. 10, 14, and 17; Historical Memoirs of the Queens of England, (see LAWRENCE, MISS H.) Dr. Duran's Lives of the Queens of England of the House of Hanover, 2 vols. p. 8vo, 1855, 3d ed., 1861, and his Memoir of Queen Adelaide, Consort of King William IV., 1861, p. 8vo, Queens of England and their Times, by Francis Lancocott, 1857, 2 vols. p. 8vo. The Lives of the Princesses of England, (see GREEN, MRS. Athen.*, 1861, i. 658.) Life and Letters of Arabella Stuart, by Elizabeth Cooper, 1866, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. For the copyright of The Queens, Miss Strickland was paid £2000—it was sold in May, 1857, for £6900, (see Lon. Pub. Circ., June 1, 1857, 229.) She has since repurchased this, and a number of copyrights of her works. We have before us many commendatory notices of this important publication—M. Guizot pronounces it "a charming work,—full of interest, at once serious and pleasing," and the London Times declares it to possess "the fascination of a romance united to the integrity of history." On the other hand, portions of it have been censured as unduly laudatory of the Stuarts and unjustly abusive of their opponents. The Edinburgh Reviewer remarks,

"It is with the tone of Miss Strickland's observations upon individual character that we think we have a right to find fault. There is scarcely a conspicuous defender of her principles upon whose faults she has had the courage to do justice, nor a leader of the opposite party to whose merits she has had the generosity to give due honour. . . . We need not point out how entirely such faults as those which we have thus briefly noticed must deprive the work in which they occur of all real historical value."—April, 1849, 437, 461: Miss Strickland's Queens of England: Stuart Series

"The writings of this lady," comments the Quarterly Reviewer, "notwithstanding a pervading poverty of style and an equally pervading feebleness of thought, and notwithstanding the graver faults of frequent inaccuracy and almost constant partiality, are by no means without their use. . . . If not always a safe guide herself, she is at least useful as directing the reader to better and more trustworthy authorities"—July, 1854, art. vii.: Lives of the Queens of England, &c.

"Miss Strickland's interesting volumes are particularly valuable to the historian for the copious extracts which they contain from curious unpublished documents which had escaped the notice of writers too exclusively occupied with political events to give much heed to details of a domestic and personal nature."—*W. Stuart, Gilbert, LL.D., the son of George Stuart, Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, was b. at Edinburgh, 1742; d. at his father's house at Musselburgh, 1786. He has already been noticed, not much to his honour, in our article on HENRY, ROBERT, (p. 826, supra); and more than most readers will care to know about such a sot, grumbler, scold, and literary Ishmaelite will be found in the authorities cited below. Of his grumbling and scolding here is a choice specimen:

"It is my constant fate to be disappointed in every thing I attempt: I do not think I ever had a wish that was gratified, and never dreaded an event that did not come. . . . I mortally detest and abhor this place [Edinburgh] and everybody in it. . . . A curse on the country, and all the men, women, and children of it. . . . The publication is too good for the country."—Letter, June 17, 1774.

The last sentence enables us to interpret the oburgation which precedes it. The "too good publication" was the violently abusive Edinburgh Magazine and Review, (see SMELLIE, WILLIAM,) which with a moderate share of decency might have succeeded very well. How he worried poor Dr. Henry we have already shown; how he attacked Dr. Robertson (in Nos 5 and 7, infra) will be seen by a reference to Lord Brougham's Life of that great historian, (Men of Letters of the Time of George III., ed. 1855, 274-77,) and other authorities, (infra.) Stuart's complaint that he never "had a wish that was gratified" was, unfortunately, ill grounded his "wish" for strong potations was "gratified" so often that his bodily powers sunk under the unequal conflict. This prominent member of the genus irritabile (see p. 175, supra) possessed abilities which under happier auspices would have greatly benefited the world,—which under unhappy auspices produced works of no inconsiderable value. He published the following:

1. Historical Dissertation concerning the Antiquity of the British Constitution, Edin., 1768, 8vo. 2d ed., Lon., 1770, 8vo; 1771, 8vo; 1776, 1778, 4to, 1790, 8vo. Rewarded by the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh.

"Here the author has made a great, and indeed a splendid, effort to eclipse the reputation of Robertson, whom he both envied and hated. As the one historian considered Mary guilty of some of the foulest crimes laid to her charge, it was almost an obvious consequence that the other should represent her as innocent"—DR. R. D. C. Robbins, Andover, 8vo, 1854; 12mo, 1859.

"If candour, integrity of purpose, and apostolic piety, united to deep research, persevering industry, and varied erudition, could qualify any man for the task of translating and expounding critically the most difficult of the Pauline Epistles, we believe that Professor Stuart possesses these endowments. . . . Mr Stuart is original both in his translations and his comments. He at one time objects to Calvin, at another to Arminius; and we do not think that any partisan will have reason to quarrel with the professor for a blind adherence to any 'set of opinions'."—Brit. Critic, Oct. 1853, 430, 431.

"As an exhibition of the doctrine of the epistle, Dr Hodge's Commentary [new ed., Phila., 1864, 8vo] far surpasses Dr Stuart's, and, indeed, surpasses any thing with which we are acquainted in the English language."—C. P. KRAUTH, Jr., D.D. (Phila.) Lutheran, June 30, 1864.

"To Andover, under the lead of the veteran Stuart, belongs the honor of having opened the rich treasures of German literature and theology to the American, if not to the English, world."—Evangel. Rev., July, 1862, 151. See, also, July, 1863, 466, (by W. B. Sprague, D.D.)

"Moses Stuart had the sagacity to discover the value of the German as the source of the best weapons for the defence of the faith. He had a yet greater merit,—he had the moral courage to stand up in defence of the literature he prized. . . The apparently irresistible evidence of the reality and value of his discoveries did not remove all prejudice at once,—for the irresistible, as is well known, always has a serious time when it encounters the irresistible. . . Things have greatly changed since then. Many of the class of men of which we speak are as ignorant as ever, but they have the grace no longer to boast of it."—C. P. KAUTZ, JR., D.D.: Lutheran, &c., Oct. 16, 1862.

As regards "various readings," the following testimony to the substantial correctness of our authorized version is too valuable to be omitted:

"Out of some eight hundred thousand various readings of the Bible that have been collated, about seven hundred and ninety-five thousand are of just about as much importance to the sense of the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures as the question in English orthography is, whether the word honour shall be spelled with a u or without it. Of the remainder, some change the sense of particular passages or expressions, or omit particular words or phrases; but no one doctrine of religion is changed, not one precept is taken away, not one important fact is altered, by the whole of the various readings collectively taken."—MOSES STUART.

"The great work of Professor Stuart was that of redeeming theology from an iron-handed metaphysics, disenthraling the free meaning of the Bible from slavery to an artificial logic."—EDWARDS A. PARK, D.D.: Funeral Sermon on Professor Stuart.

"Mr. Stuart's vocation was to call back the Bible, the genuine original Bible, in its true interpretation, into the Theology of the Anglo Saxons. This great work he did,—nobly and effectually accomplished it; and it was task enough for any one man."

—CALVIN BROWN, D.D., Sept. 1, 1854. Sprague's Annals, ut supra. "The first characteristic of Professor Stuart as a commentator is the exhaustive thoroughness of his labor. He leaves no question with regard to the external history of the book under treatment without full discussion, makes a fair statement of all tenable theories; enters into the derivation, affinity, and assignable significations of every important word; and inserts or appends dissertations, or, as he prefers to call them, excursions, on every point of difficult decision and on the bearings of every salient phase of doctrine and opinion. He is also unammelled by traditions, and never shrinks from avowing his honest belief when it departs from the standard of critical orthodoxy or diminishes the weight of argument for his own theological dogmas. His exegesis is in general skilful and felicitous, especially in bringing out the meaning of obscure passages and adding new and delicate shades of thought to the obvious and more superficial sense; but it is sometimes too refined and subtle, attaching to a word or sentence a signification which presupposes in the author a philological taste kindred to his own. His style has some marked faults, and perhaps no distinctive excellence. He is prolix, is fond of unusual and learned words, and mingles too freely with his English diction words and phrases from the Latin and Greek."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D. N. Amer. Rev., April, 1862, 560.

"Moses Stuart, with all his versatility, became a rich blessing to the churches, by training their preachers in the more thorough study of the whole truth, as revealed with open face in the inspired word."—HENRY B. SMITH, D.D. (of the Union Theological Seminary, N. York.) Amer. Theol. Rev., Jan. 1862, 49, (The Theological System of Emerson).

"More than seventy of his pupils have been the presidents or professors of our highest literary institutions; more than a hundred, missionaries to the heathen, and about thirty of them have been engaged in translating the Bible into foreign languages."—J. Stubbe, Henry, b. at Partney, Lincolnshire, 1631, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where his learning and talents secured the patronage of Sir Harry Vane, became an eminent physician, and still more eminent as a controversial pamphleteer,—attacking the Royal Society, his old friends the Republicans, &c. He was drowned whilst attempting to cross a river between Bath and Bristol, July 12, 1676. Two of his best-known controversies have been already referred to, (see GLANVILLE, or GLANVILL, JOSEPH, Nos. 4, 5, and 6, SPRAT, THOMAS, D.D., No. 3.) A list of his numerous pieces, (by no means worth to the modern reader the space it would occupy here,) medical, political, &c., published 1657-73, and an account of his life, will be found in Bliss's *Wood's Athen. about 1600. He wrote an answer (said to be able) to Cardinal Allen's Defence of the English Catholics, but is best known by The Discoverie of a Gaping Gulf, wherein England is like to be swallowed by another French Marriage, &c., 1579, sm. 8vo, (Bindley, Pt. 1, 1733, £5 7s 6d.); against the alliance of Queen Elizabeth with the Duke of Anjou, (see SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP.) For this patriotic act his right hand was cut off with a butcher's knife and mallet: Page, the publisher or disperser of the pamphlet, was rewarded in the same manner. See *Masters's Hist. of C. C. Stubbes, Stubbs, or Stubs, Philip, a kinsman of the preceding, is described by Wood (Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 646) as "a most rigid Calvinist, a bitter enemy to popery, and a great corrector of the vices and abuses of his time; and though not in sacred orders," he continues, "yet the books he wrote related to divinity and morality." He was educated at Cambridge and Oxford. Referring to Wood for his other publications, we shall only notice: The Anatomie of Abuses, Lon., 1583, 4to; 2d ed., 1583, 4to; again, 1584, 8vo, (in *J. Alfred Suckling, Lon., r. 8vo, 1836.

"As a writer, Sir John Suckling will command admiration so long as a taste for whatever is delicate and natural in poetry shall remain. His works are the production of a genius truly poetic and original; his language is animated and forcible, his versification, for the age, smooth and flowing; the structure of his stanzas is simple, and occasionally novel,—founded apparently, in some instances, on Italian models. In descriptions of feminine grace and beauty he is peculiarly happy, and in his prose compositions is clear, nervous, and sparkling.

"If we bring his poems to the test of comparison with succeeding writers, notwithstanding the continued progress of elegant literature since his day, the result will prove that in the lighter species of poetry he remains unrivalled. Had his name been unknown in any other department of literature, or unaccompanied with any historical associations, his ballads and songs alone would render his fame imperishable. In his prose compositions Suckling has been equally admired; his letters are full of wit, spirit, and gallantry, and have been rarely surpassed. His 'Account of Religion by Reason' and his letters to Mr. Jermy prove his ability to reason with closeness and compose with nervous elegance."—Extracts from the Editor's Preface.

"Considering the manner of writing then in fashion, the purity of Sir John Suckling's style is quite surprising."—Dr. Lockier, Dean of Peterborough.

"The grace and elegance of his songs and ballads are intimitable."—George Ellis Specimens.

"Sir John Suckling is acknowledged to have left far behind him all former writers of song in gaiety and ease; it is not equally clear that he has ever since been surpassed. His poetry aims at no higher praise; he shows no sentiment or imagination, either because he had them not, or because he did not require either in the style he chose. . . . Suckling's Epithalamium, though not written for those 'Qui Musas cithis severiores,' has been read by almost all the world, and is a matchless piece of liveliness and facility."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part 3, ch. v., sec. 56, and n.

"His 'Ballad on a Wedding' is his masterpiece, and is indeed

survivalled in that class of composition for the voluptuous delicacy of the sentiments and the luxuriant richness of the images. . . . Buckling's Letters are full of habitual good sense. . . . His peculiar powers deserted him in attempting dramatic dialogue."—HASLERT: Lects on the Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. III.

His songs "When, dearest, I but think of thee," and "Tell me, ye juster Deities," are among his best compositions.

Sumner, Bradford, a native of Taunton, Mass., graduated at Brown University, 1808, was a tutor in that institution, 1809-11, and subsequently became a counsellor-at-law at Boston. 1. Oration, July 4, 1828, Bost., 1828, 8vo. 2. Address before the Massachusetts Peace Society, 1831, 1831, 8vo.

Sumner, Charles, LL.D., son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (infra), was b. in Boston, Jan. 6, 1811, fitted for college at the Boston Latin School, and graduated at Harvard, 1830; entered the Law School at Cambridge, 1831, was admitted to the Bar at Worcester in the same year, and commenced practice at Boston, 1834, when he was appointed Reporter of the Circuit Court, delivered lectures to the law-students at Cambridge, 1835, '36, '37, '43, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 189, 216, 281, 297, 430,) but declined overtures for the successorship to Judge Story's chair, after his decease, travelled in Europe in 1837-40, '57, '58; succeeded Daniel Webster as United States Senator, 1851, and still (1870) occupies that position. Before his admission to the Bar he became the chief editor of the American Jurist, and contributed to it, among other papers, a valuable article on Legal Bibliography, (in vol. xii.: see Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 6;) as Librarian of the Harvard Law Library, he prepared a Catalogue of the Books in that institution, 1834, 8vo, pp. 228, he edited, with Appendix and Indexes, Andrew Dunlap's Treatise on the Practice of the Courts of Admiralty in Civil Causes of Maritime Jurisdiction, Phila., 1836, 8vo, (see N. Amer.

Rev., xlii. 72, by G. S. Hillard;) as Reporter, he published Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Circuit Court of the United States for the First Circuit, from May Term, 1829, to May Term, 1839, Bost., 3 vols. 8vo, 1836-41, 2d ed., 1848-49-51, (see 16 Leg. Obs., 414; 3 Law Rep., 403; GALLISON, JOHN; STORY, JOSEPH, LL.D.); and, in conjunction with J. C. Perkins, edited Vesey Jr.'s (see VESKY, FRANCIS, JR.) Chancery Reports, 1844-45, 20 vols. 8vo, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 474.) To these important services are to be added an able defence (written in Paris at the request of Governor Lewis Cass, and published in Galignani's Messenger, &c.) of the American Claim in the North-Eastern Boundary controversy with England, and the suggestion to Mr. Wheaton of a work on the Law of Nations,—since carried into effect by the well-known treatise (see WHEATON, HENRY, LL.D., No. 10) of the latter gentleman. Having thus discharged the debt which every lawyer is said, on high authority, to owe to his profession, Mr. Sumner has felt at liberty to devote all the treasures of his learning and all the vigour of his eloquence to the promotion of universal freedom in America, and the spread of peace, justice, and truth among all nations. Perhaps the best-known of his orations, addresses, and speeches are the following: 1. The True Grandeur of Nations, July 4, 1845, Bost., 1845, 8vo; 2d ed., 1845, pp. 96, Phila., 1847, 8vo. 5 or 6 edits., at least, were pub. in London. See N. Amer. Rev., lxi. 518, Chris. Exam., xxxix. 437, Story's Life and Letters, ii. 543, Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 43. Also highly commended by Chancellor Kent, Rogers the poet, Chambers's Edin. Jour., &c. 2. "We have in our possession many of Mr. Sumner's speeches; and we confess that, for depth and accuracy of thought, for fullness of historical information, and for a species of gigantic morality which treads all sophistry under foot and rushes at once to the right conclusion, we know not a single orator, speaking the English tongue, who ranks as his superior"—Edin. Jour.

"May I suggest to you to purchase, read, and study two volumes just published, of Charles Sumner's Orations and Speeches? You will find them full of the most noble views and inspiring sentiments. I could ask a young man, just entering public life, nothing better than to form his conduct after the high models there presented"—HORACE MANN, Washington, Dec. 1850

We select these as specimens of the many eulogies of a similar character, from foreign and domestic authorities, which now lie before us

"The Hon. Charles Sumner has recently presented to the library of Harvard College a collection of valuable pamphlets, making in all more than 400 volumes. This is no new thing for Mr. Sumner to do. For a long series of years Mr. Sumner has been a benefactor of the library, and within five years he has given to it more than 7000 pamphlets and 1000 volumes, among which are many of great value, which could not have been otherwise procured."—Oct. 1867

Sumner, Charles Pinckney, father of the preceding, and son of Major Job Sumner, a distinguished officer of the Revolutionary Army, was b. at Milton, Mass., Jan. 20, 1776; graduated at Harvard College, 1796, and subsequently studied law under the guidance of Josiah Quincy; appointed High-Sheriff of the County of Suffolk, 1825, and retained this post by successive appointments until his resignation, a few days before his decease, which occurred April 24, 1839. 1. There has been recently issued: John Milton: a Vindication, especially from the Charge of Arianism, by J. W. Morris, Lon., 1862, 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 627. Since we wrote our article on Milton, other MSS. found in the packet discovered by Mr. Lemon have been printed, in a volume entitled Original Papers illustrative of the Life and Writings of John Milton; including Sixteen Letters of State written by Him. Now first Published from MSS. in the State Paper Office, by W. Douglas Hamilton, Lon., 1859, sm. 4to, (Camden Soc.) See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 810; Lon. Critic, 1860, 108.

Sumner, George, Professor of Botany at Trinity College, Hartford, was b. at Pomfret, Conn., Dec. 19, 1793, graduated at Yale College, 1813, and M.D. at Philadelphia, 1817; settled at Hartford, 1819; d. Feb. 20, 1855. Compendium of Physiological and Systematic Botany, Hartford, 1820, 12mo.

Sumner, George, son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (supra), was b. in Boston, Feb. 5, 1817, studied at Heidelberg and Berlin, and resided many years abroad, occupied in travelling in Europe, Asia, and Africa,—devoting especial attention to international laws, and to the codes, politics, institutions, and philanthropic organizations of each country. He d. at Boston, Oct. 6, 1863. As an author, he was favourably known by articles in French, German, and English periodicals, (Journal des Débats, Allgemeine Zeitung, North American Review, Democratic Review, &c.) some of which have been published in several languages, and by a number of valuable monographs. We notice the following: 1. Memoirs of the Pilgrims at Leyden; an Address delivered at Cambridge, Mass., 1845, pub. in Mass. Hist. Soc. Coll., vol. ix, 3d Series.

"A more accurate research than was ever before made has been instituted by our ingenious countryman, Mr. George Sumner, into the condition of the Pilgrims at Leyden."—Edward Everett's Oration and Speeches, ii. 484

2. The Pennsylvania System of Prison-Discipline Triumphant in France, Phila., 1847, 8vo., again, 1851. 1st ed. was printed as a Boston City Document, 1847. The "triumph" of this system in Europe is partially owing to Mr. Sumner's zealous and intelligent advocacy of it. 3. An Address on the Progress of Reform in France, 1853. 4. An Oration delivered before the Municipal Authorities of the City of Boston, July 4, 1859, Bost., 1859, 8vo., pp. 67; 3d ed., 1859.

See, also, Hist. Mag., 1859, 323.

The Opinione, the leading journal of Turin, declared the Oration to be "nobly generous to Italy,—honourable to Boston and to America."

The New York edition of Lamartine's History of the Girondists contains a reply by Mr. Sumner to the author's attack on the United States.

In Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1858-60, 422, will be found a Letter of Mr. Sumner's to the poet Longfellow on the character of Washington Irving. The following has since been published.

"George Sumner has been twice up here . . . I really was heartily glad to meet him again, for he is altogether one of the most curiously instructed American travellers that I have ever met with."—WASHINGTON IRVING. Sumner's side, Sept. 20, 1852 Life and Letters, iv (1864) 119

Although known to be a zealous defender of American institutions, Mr. Sumner was often consulted by foreign Governments on questions of political economy; and publicists, statistes, and statisticians of all countries were made welcome to the valuable results of his intelligent cosmopolitanism.

"Mr. Sumner is a man of superior intelligence, very accomplished, perfectly familiar with all European affairs, and knowing the different parties and politics of Europe much better than any European with whom I am acquainted."—ALEXIS C. H. DE TOCQUEVILLE. Letter to General Cavaignac

"I accept his researches with confidence, for I have verified the precision and accuracy which he brings to all labours."—BARON F. H. ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

See, also, Humboldt's Letter to Sumner, Paris, May 19, 1845.

"The emperor Nicholas reposed more confidence in him for information on this country than on any other American."—Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 1854, 332, (q v)

With such disqualifications for political favour, and the additional misfortune of familiarity with foreign tongues, we need not marvel that he was never invited to represent his Government at a French, German, or Russian court.

But at home, among the people, as well as abroad, Mr. Sumner's oral instructions were highly valued: from November 1 to March 15, 1860, he gave no less than one hundred and two lectures in cities and towns of the United States. To his labours, in conjunction with those of Dr. S. G. Howe, we owe the establishment in America of Schools for Idiots. His Essay on the subject, first printed in the Legislature of Massachusetts, was published in French (in Annales de la Charité) at Paris and in Italian at Turin.

Swift, Jonathan, D.D., November 30, 1667-October 19, 1745, a descendant of an ancient Yorkshire family, was the grandson of the Rev. Thomas Swift, Vicar of Goodrich, Herefordshire, (husband of Elisabeth Dryden, aunt of Dryden the poet,) and the son of Jonathan Swift, Steward of the King's Inns, Dublin, "that renowned city," remarks our author, "where (about invidia) I had the honour to draw my first breath," an event which occurred seven months after his father's death. "As to my native country," writes Swift, on another occasion, "I happened, indeed, by a perfect accident to be born here, my mother being left here from returning to her house at Leicester, and I was a year old before I was sent to England; and thus I am a Teague, or an Irishman, or what people please, although the best part of my life was in England"—Letter to Mr. Grant, March 23, 1733-4. Scott's Swift, xviii 203.

It will be observed that this statement is not altogether candid. With what propriety a birth in a place of permanent family residence is called, in Swift's sense, "a perfect accident," it is difficult to determine. Nor does the Dean speak more truly when he alleges that he was "sent to England when a year old." He was stolen to England by his too affectionate nurse, who returned to her home at Whitehaven, by request of a dying relative, bearing with her a charge too precious to be left behind. Rather than permit the child to run the hazard of a second voyage, the mother consented to let him remain where he was for nearly three years, after which period he was restored to her in Dublin. But we are sorry to say that this was not the only fiction of which the unwilling Irishman was guilty upon this to him unwelcome theme.

"Dr. Swift," remarks one of his most intimate and valued friends, "has told me that he was born in the town of Leicester, and that his father was minister of a parish in Herefordshire"—Pope Spenser, Singer's ed., 1820, 161.

When dissatisfied with Ireland, he would often exclaim, "I am not of this vile country, I am an Englishman." Yet at times he was known to point out the very house (No. 7 Huey's Court) in Dublin where he first drew breath. But he certainly did not consider that this "perfect accident" deprived him of the right to call himself an Englishman.

"I may observe," says a late eminent historian, "that, to the best of my belief, Swift never, in any thing that he wrote, used the word Irishman to denote a person of Anglo-Saxon race born in Ireland. He no more considered himself as an Irishman, than an Englishman born at Calcutta considers himself as a Hindoo"—LORD MACAULAY Hist. of England, iii ch xvii, n.

At six years of age Swift was placed at school at Kilkenny, and on the 24th of April, 1682, was received as pensioner of Trinity College, Dublin, where he probably had a scholarship, as he remained there until 1688, when, on the breaking out of the Rebellion, he emigrated to Leicester, where his mother had for some years lived on the charity of her English relations. In Ireland, after the death of her husband, her family (Swift, and a daughter, a little older than himself,—afterwards Mrs. Fenton,—were her only children) had been dependent upon her two brothers-in-law, Godwin and William Swift, both settled in that country. At college Swift distinguished himself indeed, but it was by the contempt of rules, defiance of authorities, neglect of studies, and the consequent penalties and censures with which these grave offences were visited. It was only specialis gratia that, February 15, 1685, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Among the English relations of his mother was the wife of Sir William Temple, and in a few months after Swift's arrival in Leicester this connection led to the reception of the youth in the great man's family, in the capacity of secretary to the retired statesman. Here, for the first two years at least, his position was not the most pleasant that can be imagined.

"An eccentric, uncomely, disagreeable young Irishman, who had narrowly escaped plucking at Dublin, attended Sir William as an amanuensis, for board and twenty pounds a year; dined at the second table, wrote bad verses in praise of his employer, and made love to a very pretty dark-eyed young girl who waited as Lady Giffard. Little did Temple imagine that the coarse exterior of his dependent concealed a genius equally suited to politics and to letters,—a genius destined to shake great kingdoms, to stir the laughter and the rage of millions, and to leave to posterity memorials which can perish only with the English language. Little did he think that the flirtation in his servant's hall, which he perhaps scarcely deigned to make the subject of a jest, was the beginning of a long unprosperous love which was to be as widely famed as the passion of Petrarch or of Abelard. Sir William's secretary was Jonathan Swift, Lady Giffard's waiting-maid was poor Stella."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Sir William Temple: Edn. Rev., Oct. 1838, 178. repub. in his Essays

"His spirit had been bowed down, and might seem to have been broken, by calamities and humiliations. The language which he was in the habit of holding to his patron, as far as we can judge from the specimens which still remain, was that of a lackey, or rather of a beggar. [Note: See Swift's Letter to Temple of Oct. 6, 1694.] A sharp word or a cold look of the master sufficed to make the servant miserable during several days. [Note: Journal to Stella, Letter XIX.] But this tameness was merely the tameness with which a tiger, caught, caged, and starved, submits to the keeper who brings him food. The humble menial was at heart the haughtiest, the most aspiring, the most vindictive, the most despotic, of men."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. ch. xix

"It was at Shene and at Moor Park, with a salary of twenty pounds and a dinner at the upper servants' table, that this great and lonely Swift passed a ten years' apprenticeship—work, a casework that was only not a livery—bent down a knee as proud as Lucifer's to supplicate my lady's good graces or run on his honour's errands. It was here, as he was writing at Temple's table, or following his patron's walk, that he saw and heard the men who had governed the great world,—measured himself with them, looking up from his silent cover, ganged their brains, weighed their wits, turned them, and tried them, and marked them. Ah, what platitudes he must have heard! what feeble jokes! what pompous commonplaces! what small men they must have seemed, under those enormous periwigs, to the swarthy, uncouth, silent Irish secretary. I wonder whether it ever struck Temple that that Irishman was his master! I suppose that dismal conviction did not present itself under the ambrosial wig, or Temple could never have lived with Swift. Swift sickened, rebelled, left the service, ate humble pie and came back again, and so for ten years went on, gathering learning, swallowing scorn, and submitting with a stealthy rage to his fortune."—TRACEY: English Humourists of the Eighteenth Century: a Series of Lectures: Swift.

See, also, his Lecture on Charity and Humour, appended to N. York ed. of his Lectures. We have allowed this lively raconteur to anticipate the regular course of our narrative. Installed as secretary, Swift devoted himself to study, and soon acquired a large stock of historical information and some knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics.

After about two years' residence with Sir William, he made a short visit to Ireland for the benefit of his health: "a surfeit of stone-fruit" (such is his explanation) had resulted in attacks of giddiness and other disorders, from which he suffered, more or less, to the end of his days.

On his return to Moor Park he was pleased to find himself treated with more consideration by a patron who had been taught the value of his company by its temporary deprivation. King William's fondness for Temple's society brought him frequently to the Park, and he took enough notice of the scribe to arouse ambitious hopes which the monarch never took the pains to gratify. He, however, taught the secretary how to out and eat asparagus (of which the sovereign seems to have been as fond as he was of "green peas") in the Dutch manner, a lesson which the Dean, in more prosperous days, was not unwilling to rehearse for the benefit of his oft-instructed guests,—and offered him the captaincy of a troop of horse,—an honour which was not accepted. After Swift had taken orders, William promised Temple that the divine should have a prebend of Canterbury or Westminster; but with the death of the patron died all the monarch's interest in the dependant.

In 1692 Swift entered himself of Hart Hall, Oxford, for the purpose of taking his degree of M.A., which he received on July 4th of that year. Shortly afterwards he left Sir William's roof, after a cold parting from that gentleman; October 18, 1694, he was admitted to deacon's orders; January 13, 1695, he took priest's orders; and the prebend of Kilroot, in the diocese of Connor, Ireland, bestowed by Lord Capel, enabled him to enter upon the duties of the pastorate. In the same year, (1695,) however, at the request of Temple, he again took up his residence at Moor Park, and there remained until the death of the former, January 27, 1698. He left his companion a legacy and any profit which might arise from the publication of his posthumous works,—which Swift gave to the world, London, 1700-3, 3 vols. 8vo. We have not yet, however, done with Moor Park: it was here during his second term of residence) that he contracted an intimacy which exercised a powerful influence upon the future lives of himself, the object of his attentions, and a later admirer of his shining parts. Miss Esther Johnson, better known as Stella, resided with her mother, a companion of Lady Giffard, (Sir William Temple's sister,) at Moor Park. The secretary (he was in 1695 about thirty, his pupil thirteen) directed her studies, and soon taught her the art to love. Her future history will be found detailed at length by the biographers of Swift. Suffice it here to say that, after many years of painful experience of the peculiarities of her strange lover, she died in Dublin, January 28, 1728. It has been generally supposed that she was privately married to Swift in 1716, in the garden of the deanery, by the Bishop of Clogher. Yet in her will, drawn up as late as December, 1727, she describes herself as Esther Johnson, spinster. Now that we have entered upon the history of Swift's loves, let us dispatch the subject in a few words.

Varina, a predecessor of Stella's, was the title by which Swift designated Miss Jane Waryng, who first declined his proposals, and then herself made overtures which were received in a style which at once closed all negotiations between the parties. Vanessa was the poetical name of Miss Esther Vanhomrigh, who about 1712, being between eighteen and twenty, fell desperately in love with Swift, then not much less than forty-five. How both the ladies, Stella and Vanessa, followed Swift to Ireland, how both suffered from the pangs of jealousy and the crooked dealing of the unworthy lover, and how fatal was the fruit of that knowledge so anxiously desired by the unhappy Vanessa,—all these and other details have been graphically sketched by Sir Walter Scott in his Life of Swift. We give a brief quotation

"Miss Vanhomrigh . . . determined on bringing to a crisis those expectations of a union with the object of her affections, to the hope of which she had clung amid every vicissitude of his conduct towards her. The most probable ban was his undefined connection with Mrs. Johnson, which, as it must have been perfectly known to her, had, doubtless, long excited her secret jealousy. . . . At length, however, Vanessa's impatience prevailed, and she ventured on the decisive step of writing to Mrs. Johnson herself, requesting to know the nature of that connection. Stella, in reply, informed her of her marriage with the Dean; and, full of the highest resentment against Swift for having given another female such a right as Miss Vanhomrigh's inquiries implied, she sent to him her rival's letter of interrogation and, without seeing him, or awaiting his reply, retired to the house of Mr. Ford, near Dublin. Every reader knows the consequence. Swift, in one of those paroxysms of fury to which he was liable, both from temper and disease, rode instantly to Marley Abbey. As he entered the apartment, the sternness of his countenance, which was peculiarly formed to express the fiercer passions, struck the unfortunate Vanessa with such terror that she could scarce ask whether he would sit down. He answered by flinging a letter on the table, and, instantly leaving the house, mounted his horse, and returned to Dublin. When Vanessa opened the packet, she only found her own letter to Stella. It was her death-warrant. She sunk at once under the disappointment of the delayed yet cherished hopes which had so long sickened her heart, and beneath the unrestrained wrath of him for whose sake she had indulged them. How long she survived this last interview is uncertain, but the time does not seem to have exceeded a few weeks."—Section v

(See the poem of Cadmus and Vanessa, and the Correspondence of Swift and Vanessa, in Swift's Works.)

This occurred in 1722, when the reverend Lothario had attained the mature age of fifty-four. Vanessa, who had resided in Ireland since 1714, was about twenty-nine; Stella, who had followed Swift to Ireland about 1700, and since then had made it her home, was now about forty. We return to our chronological summary of Swift's ecclesiastical, political, and literary biography. In the next year (1699) after the death of Temple he accompanied Lord Berkeley to Ireland as chaplain, acting for a time as private secretary; in the same year he received from his lordship, in place of the deanery of Derry, which he had promised him, the rectory of Agher and the vicarages of Laracor (about twenty miles from Dublin) and Rathbeggan, in the diocese of Meath; to which was added in 1700 the prebend of Dunlavin; in 1701 he published his first political tract, A Discourse on the Contests and Dissentions between the Nobles and Commons at Athens and Rome, Lon., 4to, (and this raised him to a prominent place among the leaders of the Whigs;) in 1704 appeared the Tale of a Tub, (see SWIFT, THOMAS,) together with The Battle of the Books, (see BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., p. 170, supra;) in 1705 he made an unsuccessful application for the remission of the First-Fruits for Ireland; in 1708 he published The Sentiments of a Church of England Man, an attack upon astrology, (represented by Partridge, the Almanac-maker,) under the name of Isaac

Bickerstaff, an Argument against Abolishing Christianity, and A Letter on [in defence of] the Sacramental Test; in 1709, A Project for the Advancement of Religion, ("the only work to which he ever put his name,") a Vindication of Bickerstaff, and an explanation of an Ancient Prophecy: in 1710 he again visited England, to obtain a remission of the First-Fruits and Twentieth Parts; determined to join the Tories, and was introduced to Harley and St. John; in a short time gained the remission which he had solicited for the Irish clergy; conducted The Examiner (a weekly periodical, started by St. John, Prior, and others, in support of the new ministry) from November 10, 1710, (No. 14,) to June 14, 1711, (No. 45;) formed the Tory Society of Brothers, of which he was the most active member; published, November 27, 1711, The Conduct of the Allies, (in defence of a peace with France,) of which more than 11,000 copies were sold in two months, in 1712 issued his Proposal for Correcting, Improving, and Ascertaining the English Tongue, (a treatise of little philological value,) and his Reflections on the Barrier Treaty; February 23, 1713, was made Dean of St. Patrick's, after vain efforts for an episcopal superintendence over the colonial clergy in America, (some years previous,) and the bishopric of Hereford, in May, 1714, made his last unsuccessful effort to reconcile Lords Oxford and Bolingbroke and thus secure the stability of the Tory Government, (see his letter to Edward, Earl of Oxford, June 14, 1737;) in 1714 published The Public Spirit of the Whigs, (an answer to Sir Richard Steele's Crisis,) and Free Thoughts on the Present State of Public Affairs, and received the Queen's order (rendered worthless by her Majesty's death) for £1000, returned to his deanery in 1714, and did not again visit England until 1726, in 1720 published a Proposal for the Universal Use of Irish Manufacturers, (for which the printer was prosecuted,) and in 1724 increased the popularity elicited by this tract by his famous M. B. Drapier Letters, a series of vigorous and successful protests against William Wood's patent to coin for circulation in Ireland farthings and half-pence to the amount of £108,000, (£300 was unsuccessfully offered by Lord Carteret and the Privy Council for the discovery of the author of the Fourth Letter;) in 1726 he visited England, in the same year published his Travels of Gulliver, and in March, 1727, again (for the last time) visited England, and, in conjunction with Pope, sent to the press three volumes ("the last volume" is dated 1728, but his preface bears date May 27, 1727) of their Miscellanies, (see, also, their Miscellanies, ed. 1736, 6 vols. 12mo, and POPE, ALEXANDER, supra;) in 1728-9 spent about a year with Sir Arthur Acheson, at Gosford, his seat in the North of Ireland, and about this time published a number of tracts, and wrote some light pieces of poetry, (Hamilton's Bawn, &c.); in 1735 composed, against the members of the Irish House of Commons who opposed the right of pasturage, or agistment tithe, his bitter satire of The Legion Club; in 1736 opposed by pen and tongue the primate Boulter's scheme for regulating the exchange with Ireland by diminishing the value of the gold coin in order to increase the quantity of silver, in 1738 permitted his Polite Conversation, a work of earlier years, to be sent to the press; in 1740 he evinced symptoms of that mental derangement which he had so long feared,—to escape which he had, for some time past, daily prayed for sudden death. "I hope I shall never see you again" was his wonted valedictory to his social evening circles. Here is a melancholy epistle to his first-cousin and faithful friend and neighbour, Mrs. Whiteway:

"I have been very miserable all night, and to-day extremely deaf and full of pain. I am so stupid and confounded that I cannot express the mortification I am under both in body and mind. All I can say is, that I am not in torture; but I daily and hourly expect it. Pray let me know how your health is, and your family. I hardly understand one word I write. I am sure my days will be very few, few and miserable they must be.

"I am, for those few days,

"Yours entirely,

"J. SWIFT.

"If I do not blunder, it is Saturday, July 26th, 1740."

"In the beginning of 1741," writes his friend, Dr. Patrick Delany, (p. 461, supra), "his understanding was so much impaired and his passions so greatly increased, that he was utterly incapable of conversation. Strangers were not permitted to approach him, and his friends found it necessary to have guardians appointed of his person and estate. Early in the year 1742 his reason was wholly subverted, and his rage became absolute madness. The last person he knew was Mrs. Whiteway; and the sight of her, when he knew her no longer, threw him into fits of rage so violent and dreadful that she was forced to leave him. . . . In October, 1742, after this frenzy had continued several months, his left eye swelled to the size of an egg; . . .

during one week it was with difficulty that five persons kept him by mere force from tearing out his eyes."

He had a short return of reason, succeeded by total insensibility. We resume Delany's narration:

"After the Dean had continued silent a whole year in this helpless state of idiocy, his housekeeper went into his room on the 30th of November, [1743.] In the morning, telling him that it was his birthday, and that bonfires and illuminations were preparing to celebrate it as usual, to this he immediately replied, 'It is all folly they had better let it alone.'

He sometimes celebrated his birthday himself after a very different fashion:

"I hope things will be better on Thursday, [his birthday,] else I shall be full of the spleen, because it is a day you seem to regard, although I detest it, and I read the third chapter of Job that morning."—Swift to Mrs. Whiteway, Nov. 27, 1738.

We return to the closing scene:

"In the course of about three years," says Scott, "he is only known to have spoken once or twice. At length, when this awful moral lesson had subsisted from 1743 until the 19th of October, 1745, it pleased God to release the subject of these Memoirs from this calamitous situation. He died upon that day, without a single pang, so gently, indeed, that his attendants were scarce aware of the moment of his dissolution.

"It was then that the gratitude of the Irish showed itself in the full glow of national enthusiasm. The interval was forgotten during which their great patriot had been dead to the world, and he was wept and mourned as if he had been called away in the full career of his public services. Young and old of all ranks surrounded the house, to pay the last tribute of sorrow and of affection. Locks of his hair were so eagerly sought after that Mr. Sheridan happily applies to the enthusiasm of the citizens of Dublin the lines of Shakespeare:

"Yea, beg a hair of him in memory,
And dying mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
Unto their issue."

Scott's Life of Swift

In concluding this sad story, it may be thought proper for us to join with those who, pointing the finger of admonition at the cage of the wretched maniac, exclaim, "Behold an awful monument of the retributive justice of Almighty God!" But we have no heart for such censorship. We have not so "learned Christ." Remembering that those "whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices," and that the eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, were not proved by their greater calamities to be greater sinners than "all men that dwell in Jerusalem," we presume not to "deal God's judgments round the world on all we deem his foes;" and we hesitate to pronounce nonconformity with ourselves enmity against God.

We concur with those biographers of Swift who condemn many points of his character; but we are by no means sure that either of these, if placed in like circumstances and likewise constituted, would have behaved any better.

His treatment of the three women whose names will be forever associated with his own has been greatly, perhaps justly, censured; but can nothing be said, and honestly said, in his defence?

Varina:—he certainly discouraged her late repentance; but is every postponed suitor obliged to kindle into fresh raptures whensoever it pleases the lady to change her mind?

Stella:—he was unwilling to live in matrimonial relations with her. May not the "fearful looking for" of madness which terrified his later years have long before held him in bondage, and thus constituted that a virtue which has been adjudged a crime? What meant Swift when, then apparently in the prime of his powers, he remarked of Lord Allen, "I know that he is a madman, and, if that were all, no man living could commiserate his condition more than myself"? More than twenty years before his death, he exclaimed prophetically to Dr. Young, "I shall be like that tree: I shall die at the top."

What was the mystery referred to in the following sad chapter of a bridegroom's history?

"[Immediately subsequent to the ceremony [the private marriage of Swift and Stella] Swift's state of mind appears to have been dreadful. Delany, (as I have learned from a friend of his relation,) being pressed to give his opinion on this strange union, said that, about the time it took place, he observed Swift to be extremely gloomy and agitated; so much so that he went to Archbishop King to mention his apprehensions. On entering the library, Swift rushed out with a countenance of distraction, and passed him without speaking. He found the archbishop in tears, and upon asking the reason he said, 'You have just met the most unhappy man on earth, but on the subject of his wretchedness you must never ask a question.' Swift secluded himself from society for some days. When he reappeared, his intercourse with Stella and Mrs. Dingley [the lady with whom Stella resided] was resumed, with the same guarded and cautious attention to prevent the slightest suspicion of a more intimate union with the former; as if such intimacy had not now been legal and virtuous. Stella, therefore, continued the beloved and intimate friend of Swift, the regulator of his household on public days, although she only appeared there as an ordinary guest; the companion of his social hours, and his comfort in sickness; but his wife only in name, and even that nominal union a secret from the world."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Swift, sect. v.

We do not dwell upon Delany's supposition that Swift's unhappiness arose from his knowledge that Stella and himself were, by different mothers, the children of Sir William Temple, because we concur with Scott in deeming this hypothesis untenable.

Vanessa.—It was undoubtedly very wrong for Swift to frequent her society after a declaration of love which he could not honestly encourage; but the temptation was great. Swift was but a man,—a courted, petted, spoiled man,—delighted by and delighting in the exercise of social fascinations of no common order; and it is surely something in his favour that (rather late in the day, perhaps) he so strenuously and sincerely strove to discourage that "inexpressible passion for him which Vanessa declared it was not in the power of time or accident to lessen." "though," complains she, "you endeavour by severities to force me from you." How many of Swift's censors would have visited the fair Vanessa with the "severities" which they lavish on the Dean? Let us temper judgment with mercy, and we think that "the quality of" our "mercy is not strained." Committing these suggestions—for they are not offered as vindications—to the consideration of the candid reader, we proceed to adduce the opinions of a number of eminent authorities on

SWIFT'S CHARACTER AS A MAN.

Let us first cite the testimony of his friend of many years, (surely our intimates know us, if any do), Dr. Delany, Prebendary of St. Patrick's, (p. 491, supra.)

"My lord," he writes to Lord Orrery, "when you consider Swift's singular, peculiar, and most variegated vein of wit, always rightly intended, (although not always so rightly directed), delightful in many instances, and salutary even where it is most offensive, when you consider his strict truth, his fortitude in resisting oppression and arbitrary power; his fidelity in friendship; his sincere love and zeal for religion; his uprightness in making right resolutions, and his steadiness in adhering to them, . . . his invincible patriotism, even to a country which he did not love; his very various, well-devised, well-judged, and extensive charities throughout his life, and his whole fortune (to say nothing of his wife's) conveyed to the same Christian purposes [a hospital in Dublin for lunatics and idiots—endowment £10,000] at his death, charities from which he could enjoy no honour, advantage, or satisfaction of any kind in this world, when you consider his ironical and humorous, as well as his serious, schemes for the promotion of true religion and virtue; his success in soliciting for the First-Fruits and Twentieths, to the unspeakable benefit of the Established Church of Ireland; and his felicity (to rate it no higher) in giving occasion to the building of fifty new churches in London all this considered, the character of his life will appear like that of his writings; they will both bear to be reconsidered and re-examined with the utmost attention, and always discover new luxuries and excellences upon every examination.

"They will bear to be considered as the sun, in which the brightness will hide the blemishes; and whenever petulant ignorance, pride, malignity, or envy interposes to cloud or sully his fame, I will take upon me to pronounce that the eclipse will not last long.

"To conclude. No man ever deserved better of his country than Swift did of his. A steady, persevering, inflexible friend, a wise, watchful, and a faithful counsellor, under many severe trials and bitter persecutions, to the manifest hazard both of his liberty and fortune.

"He lived a blessing, he died a benefactor, and his name will ever live an honour, to Ireland."—Observations on Lord Orrery's [see NOTES, JOHN, p. 231, (supra), new ed., 1831, 12mo] Remarks on the Life and Writings of Dr. Jonathan Swift, by P. Delany, 1764, 8vo, 291.

"He was a churchman rationally zealous; he desired the prosperity and maintained the honour of the clergy; of the dissenters he did not wish to infringe the toleration, but he opposed their encroachments. To his duty as dean he was very attentive. . . . In his church he restored the practice of weekly communion, and distributed the sacramental elements in the most solemn and devout manner with his own hand. He came to church every morning, preached commonly in his turn, and attended the evening anthem, that it might not be negligently performed. . . . The suspicions of his irreligion proceeded in a great measure from his dread of hypocrisy; instead of wishing to seem better, he delighted in seeming worse, than he was. He went in London to early prayers, lest he should be seen at church; he read prayers to his servants every morning with such dexterous secrecy, that Dr. Delany was six months in his house before he knew it. He was not only careful to hide the good which he did, but willingly incurred the suspicion of evil which he did not. He forgot what himself had formerly asserted, that hypocrisy is less mischievous than open impiety. Dr. Delany, with all his zeal for his honour, has justly condemned this part of his character."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Swift, in his Lives of the English Poets.

"Swift was in person tall, strong, and well made, of a dark complexion, but with blue eyes, ["they are quite asure as the heavens, and there's a very uncommon archness in them."—Pope, in Spence, 168;] black and bushy eyebrows, nose somewhat aquiline, and features which well expressed the stern, haughty, and dauntless turn of his mind. He was never known to laugh, and his smiles are happily characterized by the well-known lines of Shakespeare. Indeed, the whole description of Cassius might be applied to Swift. . . . His manners were, in his better days, free, lively, and engaging, not devoid of peculiarities, but blending them so well to circumstances that his company was universally courted. . . . He often exhibited in his first address a sternness and bluntness of demeanour which, detached from the mode in which he well knew how to repair the pain he had given, was harsh to his inferiors and uncivil to those of higher rank. An anecdote which, though told by Mrs. Pilkington, is well attested, bears, that the last time he was in London he went to dine with the Earl of Burlington, who was then but newly married. The earl, being willing, it is supposed, to have some diversion, did not introduce him to his lady, nor mention his name. After dinner, said the Dean, "Lady Burlington, I hear you can sing; sing me a song." The lady looked on this unceremonious manner of asking a favour with distaste, and positively refused. He said 'She should sing, or he would make her. Why, madam, I suppose you take me for one of your poor English hedge-parsons. Sing when I bid you.' As the earl did nothing but laugh at this freedom, the lady was so vexed that she burst into tears, and retired. His first compliment to her, when he saw her again, was, 'Pray, madam, are you as proud, and as ill natured now as when I saw you last?' To which she answered, with great humour, 'No, Mr. Dean; I'll sing for you, if you please.' From which time he conceived great esteem for her."—Scott's Life of Swift, Conclusion.

"Dr. Swift has an odd blunt way that is mistaken by strangers for ill nature. 'Tis so bad that there's no describing it but by facts. I'll tell you one that just comes into my head. One evening Gay and I went to see him, you know how intimately we were all acquainted. On our coming in, 'Hey-day, gentlemen,' says the Doctor, 'what's the meaning of this visit? How came you to leave all the great lords that you are so fond of, to come hither to see a poor Deau?' 'Because we would rather see you than any of them.' 'Ay, any one that did not know you as well as I do, might believe you. But, since you are come, I must get some supper for you, I suppose?' 'No, Doctor, we have supped already.' 'Snapped already! that's impossible whv, 'tis not eight o'clock yet?' 'Indeed we have.' 'That's very strange, but if you had not supped, I must have got something for you. Let me see what should I have had?' a couple of lobsters? ay, that would have done very well, two shillings' tarts, a shilling. But you will drink a glass of wine with me, though you supped so much before your usual time, only to spare my pocket?' 'No, we had rather talk with you than drink with you.' 'But if you had supped with me, as in all reason you ought to have done, you must have drank with me. A bottle of wine, two shillings. Two and two is four, and one is five: just two and sixpence apiece. There, Pope, there's half a crown for you, and there's another for you, sir, for I won't save any thing by you. I am determined.' This was all said and done with his usual seriousness on such occasions, and, in spite of every thing we could say to the contrary, he actually obliged us to take the money."—Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, 19.

"Swift, whose manner seems to have been mere misanthropy, he was a cynic rather than a poet; and his natural dryness and sarcastic severity would have been unpleasant had he not qualified them by adopting the extravagant humour of Lucian and Rabelais."—SMOLLETT Hist. of Eng. George I, Notes.

"Swift was a wild beast, who worried and baited all mankind almost, because his intolerable arrogance, vanity, pride, and ambition were disappointed."—Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, Jan. 13, 1780. Letters, ed. 1861, i. 311.

"The apostate politician, the ribald priest, the perjured lover, —a heart burning with hatred against the whole human race,—a mind richly stored with images from the dung-hill and the Lazar-house."—LORD MACAULAY Edin. Rev., lvi. 538.

"His first connections were with the Whigs, who seem to have treated him with a slight, which, with a consciousness of his extraordinary powers, he very justly resented. He unfortunately suffered himself to be betrayed by his just resentment into a coalition with their opponents, without sufficiently considering that to retain right principles in mere abstraction was no atonement for co-operation with their enemies. But it must not be forgotten that in this unhappy change he broke no confidence; that he long resisted the tendency of political separation to dissolve friendship, and that when he at last yielded, instead of persecuting old friends, as so often happens, he used all his influence to serve them."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Life, ii. ch. iii.

"It is of itself a tolerably decisive fact, that this change took place just when the Whig ministry went out of power and their adversaries came into full possession of all the patronage and interest of the government. The whole matter, however, is fairly spoken out in various parts of his own writings, and we do not believe there is any where on record a more barefaced avowal of political apostasy, undisguised and unpalpated by the slightest colour or pretence of public or conscientious motives."—LORD JEFFREY Scott's Edition of Swift Edin. Rev., Sept. 1810; republ. in Jeffrey's Essays, and in Longman's Trav. Lib. (Swift and Richardson, by Lord Jeffrey), Dec. 1862, cr. 8vo.

His lordship's estimate of Swift's public and private character is most unfavourable: it must be carefully perused after a dispassionate examination of the very different judgments of Scott and Mackintosh.

This notice of Scott's edition of Swift naturally introduces a list of

SWIFT'S CHARACTER AS AN AUTHOR.

"In his works he has given very different specimens both of sentiments and expressions. His 'Tale of a Tub' has little resemblance to his other pieces. It exhibits a vehemence and rapidity of mind, a copiousness of images, and vivacity of diction, such as he afterwards never possessed or never exerted. It is of a mode so distinct and peculiar that it must be considered by itself; what is true of that, is not true of any thing else which he has written. . . . 'What a genius I had when I wrote that book!'—Swift, in old age. In his other works is found an equable tenor of easy language, which rather trickles than flows. His delight was in simplicity. That he has in his works no metaphor, as has been said, is not true, but his few metaphors seem to be received rather by necessity than choice . . . His style was well suited to his thoughts, which are never subtilised by nice disquisitions, decorated by sparkling conceits, elevated by ambitious sentences, or variegated by far-sought learning. . . . In the poetical works of Dr. Swift there is not much upon which the critic can exercise his powers. They are often humorous, almost always light, and have the qualities which recommend such compositions,—easiness and gaiety. They are, for the most part, what their author intended. The diction is correct, the numbers are smooth, and the rhymes exact. There seldom occurs a hard-laboured expression, or a redundant epithet; all his verses exemplify his own definition of a good style—they consist of proper words in proper places."—Dr. Johnson: Life of Swift, in Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives of the English Poets, 1854, iii. 190, 191, 199. q v (Index) for the editor's illustrative Notes. See, also, Croker's Boswell's Johnson, Index.

"As an AUTHOR there are three peculiarities remarkable in the character of Swift. The first of these has been rarely conceded to an author, at least by his contemporaries. It is the distinguished attribute of ORIGINALITY, and it cannot be refused to Swift by the most severe critic. Even Johnson has allowed that perhaps no author can be found who has borrowed so little, or has so well maintained his claim to be considered as original. There was indeed nothing written before his time which could serve for his model, and the few hints which he has adopted from other authors bear no more resemblance to his compositions than the green wax to the cable which is formed from it.

The second peculiarity, which has indeed been already noticed, is his total indifference to literary fame. Swift executed his various and numerous works as a carpenter forms wedges, mallets, or other implements of his art, not with the purpose of distinguishing himself by the workmanship bestowed on the tools themselves, but solely in order to render them fit for accomplishing a certain purpose, beyond which they were of no value in his eyes. . . . The careless mode in which Swift suffered his works to get to the public, his refusing them the credit of his name, and his renouncing all connection with the profits of literature, indicate his disdain of the character of a professional author.

"The third distinguishing mark of Swift's literary character is, that, with the exception of history, (for his fugitive attempts in Pindaric and Latin verse are too unimportant to be noticed,) he has never attempted any style of composition in which he has not obtained a distinguished pitch of excellence. We have endeavoured elsewhere [vol. xi of his ed. of Swift's Works] to make some remarks on those celebrated Travels, [of Gulliver.] Perhaps no work ever exhibited such general attractions to all classes. It offered personal and political satire to the readers in high life, low and coarse incident to the vulgar, marvels to the romantic, wit to the young and lively, lessons of morality and policy to the grave, and maxims of deep and bitter misanthropy to neglected age and disappointed ambition. The plan of the satire varies in the different parts."—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Life of Swift, sect. vi., and Conclusion.

"That part of Dean Swift's satire [Gulliver's Travels] which relates to the Struldbrugs may possibly occur to some readers as bearing upon this topic. That the staunch admirers of that singularly-gifted person should have been flung into extasies on the perusal of this extraordinary part of his writings, need not surprise us. Their raptures were full easily excited, but I am quite clear they have given a wrong gloss to it, and heaped upon its merits a very undeserved praise. They think that the picture of the Struldbrugs was intended to wean us from a love of life, and that it has well accomplished its purpose. I am very certain that the dean never had any such thing in view, because his sagacity was far too great not to perceive that he only could make out this position by a most undignified begging of the question. How could any man of the most ordinary reflection expect to wean his fellow-creatures from love of life by describing a sort of persons who at a given age lost their faculties and became doting, drivelling idiots? Did any man breathing ever pretend that he wished to live, not only for centuries, but even for threescore years and ten, bereaved of his understanding, and treated by the law and by his fellow-men as in hopeless incurable dotage? The passage in question is much more likely to have proceeded from Swift's exaggerated misanthropy, and to have been designed as an antidote to human pride, by showing that our duration is necessarily limited,—it, indeed, it is not rather to be regarded as the work of mere whim and caprice."—LORD BROUGHAM: A Discourse of Natural Theology, sect. v., last note.

"Now it came to pass that, about this time, the renowned Wouter Van Twiller, full of years and honours and council-diamers, had reached that period of life and faculty which, according to the great Gulliver, entitles a man to admission into the ancient order of Struldbrugs."—WASHINGTON IRVING: Knickerbocker.

"Perhaps the most melancholy satire in the whole of that dreadful book is the description of the very old people in the voyage to Laputa. At Lugnas Gulliver hears of some persons who never die, called the Struldbrugs, and, expressing a wish to become acquainted with men who have so much learning and experience, his colloquist describes the Struldbrugs to him."—THACKERAY: English Humourists. Swift.

"The Voyages of Captain Lemuel Gulliver is indisputably his greatest work. The idea of making fictitious travel the vehicle of satire as well as of amusement, is at least as old as Lucian, but has never been carried into execution with such success, spirit, and originality as in this celebrated performance. . . . Of his poetry we do not think there is much to be said; for we cannot persuade ourselves that Swift was in any respect a poet. . . . Of his style it has been usual to speak with great and, we think, exaggerated praise. It is less mellow than Dryden's—less elegant than Pope's or Addison's—less free and noble than Lord Alington's—and utterly without the glow and loftiness which belonged to our earlier masters. It is radically a low and homely style—without grace and without affectation; and chiefly remarkable for a great choice and profusion of common words and expressions. . . . In humour and in irony, and in the talent of detecting and defining what he hated, we join with the world in thinking the Dean of St. Patrick's without a rival."—LORD JEFFREY. Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816, 46, 49, 56, 57, et ubi supra.

"By the judicious advice of Mr. Mallet, I was directed to the writings of Swift and Addison: wit and simplicity are their common attributes; but the style of Swift is supported by manly vigour, that of Addison is adorned by the female graces of elegance and mildness."—GIBSON. Memoirs of my Life and Writings, ed. 1837, 55.

"But I know your affection for whenever proceeds from your partiality to Dean Swift, whom I can often laugh with, whose style I can even approve, but surely can never admire. It has no harmony, no eloquence, no ornament, and not much correctness, whatever the English may imagine. Were not their like nature still in a somewhat barbarous state, that author's place would not be so high among their classics."—Hume to Robertson: Dugald Stewart's Account, ed. of Dr. W. Robertson, sect. ii.

"The Tale of a Tub is, in my apprehension, the masterpiece of Swift; certainly Rabelais has nothing superior, even in invention, nor any thing so condensed, so pointed, so full of real meaning, of biting satire, of felicitous analogy. The Battle of the Books is such an improvement of the similar combat in the Lutrin, that we can hardly own it as an imitation."—HALLAM. Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 578.

"Mr. Swift est Rabelais dans son bon sens et vivant en bonne compagnie. Il n'a pas, à la vérité, la gaîté du premier, mais il a toute la finesse, la raison, le choix, le bon goût qui manquent à notre curé de Meudon. Ses vers sont d'un goût singulier, et presque inimitable; la bonne plaisanterie est son partage en vers et en prose, mais pour le bien entendre, il faut faire un petit voyage dans son pays."—VOLTAIRE. Lettres sur les Anglais, Lett. 22.

"Jonathan Swift has been most inappropriately called by Voltaire the English Rabelais. Voltaire relished only the impurities of Rabelais, and his humour, when it is good, but the deep satire on society and man, the lofty philosophy, the grand style, of the curé of Meudon, escaped his notice, as he saw only the weak side of Christianity, and had no idea of the intellectual and moral revolution effected in mankind by the gospel. . . . The ages in which the two writers lived produce, moreover, a wide difference between them. Rabelais began his language, Swift finished his."—CHATEAUBRIAND. Sketch of Eng. Lit., 1837, ii. 245, 246.

Coleridge says it was "the soul of Rabelais dwelling in a dry place."

"Perhaps the best way of describing Addison's peculiar pleasantness is to compare it with the pleasantness of some other great satirists. The three most eminent masters of the art of ridicule during the eighteenth century were, we conceive, Addison, Swift, and Voltaire. Which of the three had the greatest power of moving laughter may be questioned. But each of them, within his own domain, was supreme. Voltaire is the prince of buffoons. His merriment is without disguise or restraint. He gambols, he grins, he shakes his sides, he points the finger; he turns up the nose, he shoots out the tongue. The manner of Swift is the very opposite to this. He moves laughter, but never joins in it. He appears in his works such as he appeared in society. All the company are convulsed with merriment, while the Dean, the author of all the mirth, preserves an invincible gravity, and even sourness, of aspect, and gives utterance to the most eccentric and ludicrous fancies with the air of a man reading the commination service.

"The manner of Addison is as remote from that of Swift as from that of Voltaire. He neither laughs out, like the French wit, nor, like the Irish wit, throws a double portion of severity into his countenance while laughing inwardly, but preserves a look peculiarly his own, a look of demure serenity, disturbed only by an arch sparkle of the eye, an almost imperceptible elevation of the brow, an almost imperceptible curl of the lip. His tone is never either that of a Jack-Pudding or of a Cynic. It is that of a gentleman, in whom the quickest sense of the ridiculous is constantly tempered by good nature and good breeding.

"We own that the humour of Addison is, in our opinion, of a more delicious flavour than the humour of either Swift or Voltaire. Thus much, at least, is certain, that both Swift and Voltaire have been successfully mimicked, and that no man has yet been able to mimic Addison. The letter of the Abbé Coyer to Panopthe is Voltaire all over, and imposed, during a long time, on the Académiciens of Paris. There are passages in Arbuthnot's satirical works which we, at least, cannot distinguish from Swift's best writing. But of the many eminent men who have made Addison their model, though several have copied his mere diction with happy effect, none has been able to catch the tone of his pleasantness.

"In the World, in the Connoisseur, in the Mirror, in the Languer, there are numerous papers written in obvious imitation of his Tatlers and Spectators. Most of these papers have some merit; many are very lively and amusing; but there is not a single one which could be passed off as Addison's on a critic of the smallest perspicacity."

"But that which chiefly distinguishes Addison from Swift, from Voltaire, from almost all the other great masters of ridicule, is the grace, the nobleness, the moral purity, which we find even in his merriment. Severity, gradually hardening and darkening into misanthropy, characterizes the works of Swift. The nature of Voltaire was, indeed, not inhuman, but he venerated nothing. Neither in the master-pieces of art nor in the purest examples of virtue, neither in the Great First Cause nor in the awful enigmas of the grave, could he see any thing but subjects for derillery. The more solemn and august the theme, the more monkey-like was his grimacing and chattering. The mirth of Swift is the mirth of Mephistopheles, the mirth of Voltaire is the mirth of Puck. If, as Soame Jenyns oddly imagined, a portion of the happiness of seraphim and just men made perfect be derived from an exquisite perception of the ludicrous, their mirth must surely be no other than the mirth of Addison,—a mirth consistent with tender compassion for all that is frail and with profound reverence for all that is sublime. Nothing great, nothing amiable, no moral duty, no doctrine of natural or revealed religion, has ever been associated by Addison with any degrading idea. His humanity is without parallel in literary history. The highest proof of virtue is to possess boundless power without abusing it. No kind of power is more formidable than the power of making men ridiculous, and that power Addison possessed in boundless measure. How grossly that power was abused by Swift and by Voltaire is well known. But of Addison it may be confidently affirmed that he has blackened no man's character,—nay, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find, in all the volumes which he has left us, a single taunt which can be called ungenerous or unkind. Yet he had detractors whose malignity might have seemed to justify as terrible a revenge as that which men not superior to him in genius wreaked on Bettesworth and on Franc de Pompignan. He was a politician, he was the best writer of his party, he lived in times of fierce excitement, in times when persons of high character and station stooped to scurrility such as is now practised only by the basest of mankind. Yet no provocation and no example could induce him to return railing for railing."—LORD MACAULAY Life and Writings of Addison Edin. Rev., July, 1843, republ. in his Essays, and in his Works, Lon., 1866, vii 90.

"His style is, in its kind, one of the models of English composition; it is proper, pure, precise, perspicuous, significant, nervous, deriving a certain dignity from a masterly contempt of puerile ornaments, in which every word seems to convey the intended meaning with the decision of the writer's character; not adapted, indeed, to express nice distinctions of thought or shades of feeling, or to convey those new and large ideas which must be illustrated by imagery, but qualified beyond any other to discuss the common business of life in such a manner as to convince and persuade the generality of men, and, where occasion allows it, meriting in its vehement plainness the praise of the most genuine eloquence. His verse is only, apparently, distinguished by the accident of measure, it has no quality of poetry, and, like his prose, is remarkable for sense and wit."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Life, ii ch. li. See, also, chaps. i, ii, and vii, and POPE, ALEXANDER, p. 1636, supra, (quotation from Sir J. Mackintosh.)

"Dean Swift may be placed at the head of those that have employed the plain style. Few writers have discovered more capacity. He treats every subject which he handles, whether serious or ludicrous, in a masterly manner. He knew, almost beyond any man, the purity, the extent, the precision, of the English language, and, therefore, to such as wish to attain a pure and correct style, he is one of the most useful models. But we must not look for much ornament and grace in his language."—DR HUGH BLAIR Lect. on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XXVII. See, also, Lects. "There is just published Swift's History, [of the Four Last Years of Queen Anne.] Pope and Lord Bolingbroke always told him it would disgrace him, and persuaded him to burn it. Disgrace him indeed it does,—being a weak libel, ill written for style, uninformed, and adopting the most errant mob stories. He makes the Duke of Marlborough a coward, Prince Eugene an assassin, my father remarkable for nothing but impudence, and would make Mr. Lord Somers any thing but the most amiable character in the world. If unfortunately he did not praise him while he tries to abuse."—HORACE WALPOLE to Sir Horace Mann, March 21, 1758. Letters. See, also, Feb. 10, 1758.

"Swift's reputation as a poet has been in a manner obscured by the greater splendour, by the natural force and inventive genius, of his prose writings, but if he had never written either the Tale of a Tub or Gulliver's Travels, his name merely as a poet would have come down to us, and have gone down to posterity, with well-earned honour. His Imitations of Horace, and still more his verses on his own Death, [probably written about 1730 or 1731; published 1739, fol.] place him in the first rank of agreeable moralists in verse. Swift shone as one of the most sensible of the poets, he is also distinguished as one of the most nonsensical of them."—HAZLITT Lect. on the English Poets, Lect. VI.

"Cousin Swift, you will never be a poet," was the great Dryden's candid verdict on returning to him his Pindaric Odes,—compositions of his earlier years. Of his sermons it has been remarked,

"One will see the original force of the Dean's genius more in these compositions, that were the legitimate sons of duty, than in other pieces, that were the natural sons of love."—EARL OF CHURCHILL.

"His lordship's illustration is not elegant: as regards his canon, it only needs to be exactly reversed to be nearer the truth. Addison called Swift "the most agreeable companion, the truest friend, and the greatest genius of his age," (Scott's Swift, sect. ii.) Pope ranks him as a "great master of humour," (Spence's Anecdotes, 334; Thackeray calls him "the greatest wit of all times," (Lects. on the English Humourists, Lect. IV.,) and Lord Macaulay characterizes him as "the ablest man of the Tory party," and "the keenest of all observers of life and manners," (Hist. of Eng., i. ch. iii; iv. ch. xx.) See, also, Lord Macaulay's comparison between the styles of Dr. Johnson's and Swift's political tracts, in his review of the Life and Writings of Sir William Temple, in *Edin. "At Court the Doctor had no eyes but for the very greatest. Lord Treasurer and Sir John used to call him Jonathan, and they paid him with this cheap coin for the service they took of him. He writ their lampoons, fought their enemies, flogged and bullied in their service, and, it must be owned, with a consummate skill and fierceness. He said he hath lost his intellect now, and forgotten his wrongs and his rage against mankind. I have always thought of him and of Marlborough as the two greatest men of that age. I have read his books (who doth not know them?) here in our calm woods, and imagine a giant to myself as I think of him,—a lonely fallen Prometheus, groaning as the vulture tears him. Prometheus I saw, but when first I ever had any words with him, the giant stepped out of a sedan-chair in the Poultry, whither he had come with a tipsy Irish servant parading before him, who announced him,—bawling out his Reverence's name whilst his master below was as yet haggling with his chairmen. I dislike this Mr. Swift. . . If the greatest satirist the world ever hath seen had writ against Harley, and not for him, what a history had he left behind of the last years of Queen Anne's reign! But Swift, that scorned all mankind, and himself not the least of all, had this merit of a faithful partisan, that he loved those chiefs who treated him well, and stuck by Harley bravely in his fall, as he gallantly had supported him in his better fortune."—THACKERAY. Edmond, book iii. ch. v, x.

"Dean Swift is now figuring in a fashion in which he certainly never expected to figure,—namely as the hero of a French drama. The last novelty at the Odéon is 'Le Doyen de St. Patrick,' written by MM. L. de Wailly and L. Ulbach, the former of whom wrote, some years ago, the novel 'Stella and Vanessa.' These ladies are the heroines of the drama, in the course of which both come to an untimely end. M. Tisserand, the veteran of the Odéon, represents the Dean."—Lon. Athen., Dec. 6, 1862, 739.

Mr. Taylor considers that early prejudices and the res angusta domi "rendered Sydenham incapable of appreciating Plato's more sublime sentiments. His translation, however, of other parts," he continues, "which are not so abstruse, is excellent. In these he not only presents his reader faithfully with the matter, but likewise with the genuine manner, of Plato." See Taylor's Miscellanies, (TAYLOR, THOMAS, "The Platonist," No. 22.)

Sydenham, Thomas, "the most illustrious of English physicians," also styled "The English Celsus," and "The English Hippocrates," was b. at Winford Eagle, Dorsetshire, 1624; admitted as a commoner of Magdalene Hall, Oxford, 1642; took the degree of Bachelor of Physic, 1648, and about the same time became a Fellow of All Souls' College, received the degree of M.D. at Cambridge, and subsequently settled in London, where he practised with great success, (notwithstanding the hostility of the College of Physicians,) being "the chief physician from 1660 to 1670, . . . when he was laid up with the terrible disease of the gout." After suffering from this complaint and from stone in the kidneys for many years, he d. Dec. 29, 1689, and was buried in the aisle of St. James's Church, Westminster.

"It is worth while, in the case of a man who acquired such high eminence as Sydenham, to inquire what were the causes to which he owed his great celebrity. He was not a learned man, and his works, written by him originally in English, were translated into Latin, before publication, by his friends Dr. Mapletott and Mr. Havers. He constructed no brilliant theory, and indeed was always consistent in following that which he adopted. . . . Sydenham's method of treating smallpox, though so great an improvement of the practice which then prevailed, was in opposition to the theory which he had embraced. . . . This it is which constitutes his merit, that, in an age of brilliant theories, he applied himself to questioning Nature herself; justly thinking that though 'the practice of physic may seem to flow from hypotheses, yet, if the hypotheses are solid and true, they in some measure owe their origin to practice.'"—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v. 1857, 868.

Collective editions of his Works in Latin (some styled Opera Universa, also Opera omnia Medica, and Opera Medica) were published Lon., 1685, (Processus Integri, in excellent Latin, first appeared in 1693, 12mo; 1705, 1734, 8vo; Lips., 1695, 1711, 8vo; 1827, 12mo; Genev., 1684, 12mo; 1696, 8vo; 1716, 2 tom. 4to; 1723, 4to; 1737, 2 tom. 4to; 1757, 2 vols. 4to; Leyd., 1726, 8vo; 1741, 1754, 8vo; Venet., 1735, 1762, fol.; Lion., 1737

4to, &c. In English, by C. Pechey, Lon., 1696, 1697, 1739, 1734, 1763, 8vo; trans., with Notes, by John Swan, M.D., 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; again, improved, with Notes by George Wallis, M.D., 1788, (some 1789,) 2 vols. 8vo; same, with Notes by Benjamin Rush, M.D., Phila., 1809, 8vo.

"The edition entitled 'Opera Medica,' published at Geneva, in 2 vols. 4to, in 1716, is preferable to the English editions. The translation of his works by Dr. Swan is well executed; the best edition of it is that of Dr. Wallis, in 2 vols. 8vo, published in 1789."—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 868

"Translations have been made into almost all the Modern languages. In 1696 a work was published, entitled, The Practice of Physic, by Sydenham, which is a sort of compilation from his writings, 8vo. Compendium Praxeos Medicæ Sydenhami, Lond., 1719, 18mo"—Dr. Warr: Bibl. Brit.

The Sydenham Society have published: Thomæ Sydenham, M.D., Opera Omnia, editid G. A. Greenhill, M.D., 1846, 8vo, pp. 668; and The Works of Thomas Sydenham, M.D., translated from the Latin Edition of Dr. Greenhill, with a Life of the Author, by R. G. Latham, M.D., &c., 1848-50, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. cviii., 276, viii., 296.

"All that remains of Sydenham's writing is contained in 646 octavo pages. Of these, 232 pages consist of descriptions of the various epidemics which he had himself observed. The remainder is divided between the few monographs upon particular diseases, such as hysteria, gout, dropsy, &c., and a collection of practical memoranda or empirical formulæ, for the guidance of the practitioner of medicine. . . . The grand contribution to the development of the Art of Medicine made by the English Hippocrates was this: he proved that the true mode of cure was the direct one by specifics, and that all the indirect ones by revulsions or anodynes were precarious, mischievous, or only palliative, and thus he stands midway between Hippocrates and Hahnemann. One hand he stretches to the ancient Greek, and the other he holds out to the modern German, and so he is a link in the apostolical succession of the living Church of Medicine."—J. RUTHERFORD RUSSELL, M.D. History and Heroes of the Art of Medicine, (Lon., 1861, 8vo.) Sydenham, 259, 276

"The incomparable Treatises are drawn (as it were) by another Hippocrates from his most exact and nice observation of Diseases and their symptoms; to which are added most judicious natural Hypotheses, and curative Indications deduced from them. He hath given such an exact history of all acute diseases, from the beginning of 1661 to 1680, that there is scarcely a sentence to be found therein, which is not of moment."—DR. CHARLES GOODALL, (p. 698, supra.) Hist. Act. of the Coll. Proceed against Empirycs, 1684, 4to, Epist. Ded.

"Though full of hypothetical reasoning, it had not the usual effect of making him less attentive to observation: his hypotheses seem to have sat so loosely about him, that either they did not influence his practice at all, or he could easily abandon them whenever they would not bend to his experience."—DR. JOHN GREGORY, (p. 737, supra.)

"Sydenham first discovered that the cool regimen succeeded best in Small-pox. By this discovery he saved the lives of hundreds of thousands, and we revere his memory for it, though he never heard of inoculation."—LORD MACAULAY Edin. Rev., lxi, 285

Let us not conclude even so brief a notice of the great physician without quoting his own declaration (in his chapter on the plague) of the principles which guided his professional career.

"If the reader should find that I have anywhere erred in theory, I beg his pardon, but as to practice, I declare I have faithfully related every thing, and that I never proposed any plan of cure before I had thoroughly tried it. Indeed, when I come to do, I trust I shall have a cheerful witness in my breast, that I have not only with the greatest diligence and honesty attempted the recovery of the health of all who committed themselves to my care, . . . but that also I have laboured to the utmost of my power, if by any means it might be, that the cure of diseases may be managed after I am dead with greater certainty; for I esteem any progress in that kind of knowledge (how small soever it be) . . . to be of more value than the vain pomp of nice speculations."

Dr. Samuel Johnson wrote in 1742 a Life of Sydenham, which was prefixed to Swan's edition of the Works of the latter, 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; also published in Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1742, 633, and has been republished with Johnson's Lives of the English Poets. Johnson remarks that from his treatises may be collected

"that his skill in Physic was not his highest Excellence; that his whole Character was amiable; that his chief View was the Benefit of Mankind, and the chief Motive of his Actions the Will of God, whom he mentions with Reverence, well becoming the most enlightened and most penetrating mind. He was benevolent, candid, and communicative, sincere and religious; qualities which it were happy if they could copy from him who emulate his Knowledge and imitate his Methods."

Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, published in the North British Review for November, 1849, an essay on Locke

The Soul's Errand (in consequence of an alteration of it published with his poems and translations, 1641, fol., ut infra) has often been ascribed to Sylvester. It is as the translator of Du Bartas's poems that he is best known: he published an English version of this poet's Canticle of the Victorie obtained by the French King Henrie the Fourth at Yvry, 1590, 4to, of his Triumph of Faith, &c., 1592, 4to; of his Second Weekes, 1598, 8vo; of his Miracle of the Peace in France, 1599, 4to; of his Devine Weekes and Workes, 1598, 16mo, (ea. part with separate title-page, dedication, &c.) 2d ed., 1606, 4to, some l. p.; 3d ed., (1611), 4to: *Bibl. "Both the version of Sylvester, and his original poems, published with it, are remarkable for their inequality for great beauties and for glaring defects. His versification is sometimes exquisitely melodious, and was recognized as such by his contemporaries, who distinguished him by the appellation of 'silver-tongued Sylvester.'"—Dr. Drake: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 563.

In his Literary Hours (3d ed., vol. iii., Nos. 49, 50, and 51) Drake comments on and quotes copiously from Sylvester's Du Bartas. Baxter, (Prefatory Address to his Poetical Fragments, 1681, sm. 8vo, reprinted 1821, 12mo,) after declaring that Quarles "outwent" George Wither, proceeds to declare, "Sylvester, or Dubartas, seems to me to outdo them both."

By greater critics he is as greatly praised:

His heavenly muse the Almighty to adore."

Spenser

"Bartas was some French angel girl with Bayes,
And thou a Bartas art in English Layes."

Himself Hall.
